A SHARP SKIRMISH AT KEARNEYSVILLE

Capture of the Rebels with Considerable Loss.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Oct. 19.

There are constantly being brought to Gen. McClellan's headquarters, by deserters and refugees, that the enemy is now rapidly evacuating Winchester. Whether true or false, these reports obtain considerable credit here in official circles. A reconnoissance is being made to ascertain the facts.

THE PROBABILITY OF A BATTLE.

The Star says that circumstances conspire to reduce the general impression among military men here, that the rebels in Gen. McClellan's front will soon fight. He is evidently crowding them more and more, and they have not evinced a disposition to give battle.

The fact that if they prefer retreating he may, by marching upon the arc of the circle, through some passes of the Blue Ridge, get before Richmond as soon, if not sooner, than they reach that point by marching down the valley to Staunton, is the reason why it is now thought they must fight before attempting a retreat.

SPECIAL DISPATCH FROM SHARPSBURGH.

SHARPSBURGH, Saturday, Oct. 18.

Boonsboro', near the line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, was the first place at which the rebels made a stand. Their estimated force was 3,000 infantry, two squadrons of cavalry, and four pieces of artillery, drawn up under shelter of a wood.

Our Rifle-Battery opened fire upon them. They replied well, but in thirty minutes the whole mass of their cavalry, infantry and artillery was broken and scattered.

Eight rebel dead lay on the field, and forty or fifty were wounded. One of the killed was a Lieutenant of cavalry. A letter was found on him addressed to Lieut. T. H. Parker.

Our forces bivouacked for the night. Next morning they went to within one mile of Leetown, three miles from the railroad and eight from Shepardstown, and drew up in line of battle; but the enemy not wishing to fight, our forces gradually fell back to Sharpsburgh, and thence back to their camp at 10 o'clock P. M.

LIST OF CASUALTIES.

Killed—O. Jenkins, Co. E, 11th United States.

Wounded—John Colburn, Co. H, 6th United States; Charles Ruby, Co. K, 6th United States; Henry Thompson, Martin's Massachusetts Battery; Thos. Mullen, Co. H, Nineteenth Mass., mortally; John Hanson, 6th United States.

The rebel loss is not known, as they carried some of their killed and all the wounded from the field.

The people in the districts through which we passed are violently secesh.

GENERAL NEWS FROM WASHINGTON

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

NOTES OF THE MILITARY COMMISSION.

Gen. Fremont's Military Commission has thus far confined its labors to the evacuation of Winchester by Gen. Wool, and the surrender of Harper's Ferry. The testimony of Capt. Atwell Poynz is alone wanting to complete the investigation. It is not known that any other cases will be brought before this Commission. It will be cause for general regret should the Court, so excellently constituted, and invested with such ample powers, be allowed to adjourn without making an examination of more of those extraordinary military operations which have disgraced the National arms, if not imperiled the Nation's cause.

NEW EXCHANGE OF PRISONERS.

The County Sergeant of the One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, who accompanied the recent expedition for the exchange of Union prisoners, has returned from Aiken' Landing, and reports that after a day's negotiation with the Commissioner of such matters, Mr. Wood, Superintendent of the Old Capitol, and Commissioner for the exchange, refused to fill permission to take his choice of the Union prisoners confined in the Southern jails, and, in consequence of such arrangement, has gone to Salisbury, North Carolina, to release the prisoners now confined there.

DECISION OF THE REVENUE COMMISSIONER.

The following is the conclusion of an important decision just rendered by Commissioner Boutwell in response to a communication from Hiram Franklin, Esq., one of the Assessors from New-York City:

"A manufacturer who sells his wares, at any place except upon the premises where manufactured, must take a license as a dealer.

Mills and steam gunboats are not subject to taxation under the Excise law.

Persons engaged in the business of grinding salt are the owners manufacturers within the meaning of the law. A peddler is defined to be a person who goes his rounds by traveling from place to place selling goods and wares, or one whose occupation it is to sell goods while traveling from place to place.

Diamonds and durable gems taxable as manufactures, and persons engaged in cutting and preparing these precious stones are manufacturers.

Carriages, pleasure-carriages and plate, kept for private use, are taxable, and the tax must be paid in the district where the owner resides. I am of opinion that it was the intention of Congress, by the proviso to the seventy-fifth section, to exempt the material used in the manufacture of silverware from taxation. You will therefore assess the manufacturer in the value of the ware over the value of the bullion used in its manufacture.

ARMY CHANGES.

Gen. Horace Ward has been assigned to the command of Gen. Burnet's Brigade, Sedgwick's (late Kearney's) Division. Meanwhile Gen. Burnet, who is now engaged in a Court of Inquiry here, to investigate the charges preferred by Gen. Fremont against Gen. Mansfield, and who was relieved at his own request, will patiently be assigned to the command of a division under Gen. Buell, the latter have made a request to that effect, as he did when Gen. Burnet was first made a Brigadier.

Gen. Van Allen, late Military Governor at Yorktown, has, at his own request, been been relieved from that command with a view to active service in the field. Gen. Van Allen's administration seems to have been very successful; and it is hoped that he may be assigned to a command such as his abilities deserve.

A CAMP FOR PAROLED AND EXCHANGED PRISONERS.

A new camp, named after the commander of the troops for the defence of Washington, has been established near Fort Ellsworth, Alexandria, to be occupied exclusively by paroled and exchanged prisoners. Camp Banks is under command of Col. G. Da Kessouay, and already contains upward of three thousand five hundred men, drawn from the convalescent camp, from which they were taken on account of their complaints in regard to attention and care.

AN ANTE-REVOLUTIONARY COURT-HOUSE.

The interior of the Court-house of Fairfax County, Va., has been completely destroyed; nothing remaining of the ancient structure but the walls and roof. This building was one of the oldest in the vicinity, having been built prior to the Revolution. The President of the first Court held there was a member of the Washington family; and the immortal Chatham was himself one of the Grand Jury. We regret that the damage to this structure should have been done by Union troops.

LATE SOUTHERN ITEMS.

The Charleston Mercury, of Oct. 3, says: "Lincoln is weak and insincere. Hard pressed by his own party, he issues proclamations that are mere make-shifts for the hour, intended to appease the radicals. But he leans to the Union-as-it-was party. McClellan is the representative of this party, and of the capitalists."

The same paper, in its letter from Richmond, says: "If, for example, Bragg should be as slow in fighting as he is in marching, Buell may whip him, and put the North in good humor again."

In its editorial the Mercury of the 3d inst. complains bitterly of the release, "on some flimsy pretext," of ninety-six of Porn's officers, "notwithstanding that the Governor of Virginia had made a formal requisition upon the Confederate authorities for the surrender of these very men, in order that they might be tried for their crimes under the laws of the State." It also suggests that there should be no more exchanges of prisoners, as the balance is now largely in favor of the South, claiming that there are now forty thousand National prisoners under parole, and that "the Lincoln democracy," with its usual "Punic faith," is about organizing these veterans into "an army of reserve," to be hurled against the South "at the decisive moment."

A letter from Key West, dated Sept. 13, reports 36 cases of yellow fever and 23 deaths from the disease on board the United States frigate St. Lawrence.

The Mercury reports two Yankee gunboats as feeling for masked batteries "three miles below Fort Jackson," in the Savannah River. It also refers with considerable positiveness, to "certain peace overtures said to have been made to Gen. Lee when in Maryland." The correspondent of the Savannah Republican says: "I am credibly informed that such a proposition as that described was made, and under circumstances that encouraged the hope of its acceptance."

Richmond papers of the 4th inst. announce the receipt of Northern papers of the 2d inst., and give extracts. This does not speak well for the vigilance of our picket lines and Potomac blockading squadron.

An important naval movement is announced to be on foot at Hilton Head, looking to the capture of Savannah and Mobile. It is to be commanded by Admiral Dupont.

Brig.-Gen. Rodman, C. S. A., wounded at Sharpsburgh, is dead. Brig.-Gen. Wm. Duncan Smith, late commanding rebel forces around Savannah, (formerly of Second Dragoons, U. S. A.,) is also dead.

The Mercury quotes, with evident approbation, the answer of a rebel scutry to a General officer who rebuked him for not saluting, "Oh, h—ll, General, saluting's played out." The "white trash" begin to be discontented.

The Mercury of Oct. 6 announces that on the 14th September Col. Woodward's Regiment of Partisan Rangers captured, on the Cumberland River, opposite Canton, Ky., "four steamboats laden with munitions of war and supplies for Gen. Buell's army. The cargoes were secured and the boats burned."

The Charleston Mercury of the 8th republishes, with sincere commendation and under its editorial head, the speeches of Hon. James Brooks, of New-York, and Mr. Schnerer, of Pennsylvania, made at the late Seymour ratification meeting. It also announces with pleasure that "at the next Seymour meeting Richard O'Gorman will speak."

There are fearful pictures drawn in the army correspondence of the Savannah Republican of the utter destitution of the Confederate forces. All good rebels are urged to "send forward to Lee's shivering ranks clothing, shoes, hats and blankets."

Molasses and sugar are said to be plenty down the Mississippi Valley—sugar 10 cents per pound and molasses 25 cents per gallon.

The Charleston Mercury of the 2d inst. quotes with dangerous gratitude the articles of the New-York Herald, about the Convention of Governors at Altoona. It also announces that the Confederate Steamer "290," while cruising off the mouth of the Mississippi, had captured an outward bound vessel "having Gen. Phelps and Commodore Pearson on board." It states that New-Orleans is now occupied by "8,000 white troops and 6,000 uniformed negroes." Verily, Gen. Hunter's black "draft" for the cure of secession begins to work.

Dispatches from Lee's army, dated Sept. 30, announces that owing to the large receipts of conscripts and stragglers, and the time that has been given them to recuperate, "Lee's army is in a far better condition to-day (seventeen days ago) than it was when it entered Maryland."

"Bottles Marsh.—The beast Butler, lore his clothes in a fall at New-Orleans, some days ago, while assisting his wife on board a steamer, and the rent disclosed a complete coat of mail from the neck to the thighs." A pretty good tear that!

TO THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

GEN. SCOTT'S LETTER.

The copy of a letter written by Gen. Scott to the Secretary of State on the day before the inauguration in 1861, published by Judge Van Buren, if authentic must have been derived from some source other than the State Department, since neither the President nor the Secretary of State has any knowledge of the manner in which any communication to either of them from Gen. Scott could have got into the hands of Mr. Van Buren.

ARMY ORDERS.

The order recently issued dismissing Col. Saunders, of the Nineteenth Wisconsin Volunteers, from the service for subsisting his regiment at extravagant prices, is revoked by order of the President, it appearing that he acted under orders from the Adjutant-General of that State. The secretary of War, in a letter to him, says the explanations are entirely satisfactory to the Department, and adds, "They exonerate you from any intentional breach of the army regulations, while the testimonials of your character as an efficient and patriotic officer, are highly gratifying. It gives me pleasure, therefore, to reinstate you in your command, with assurance of my personal and official confidence and respect."

Capt. Joseph Hernaquez, Fourth New-York Volunteers, has been dismissed the service for absenting himself from his regiment without leave since the commencement of the battle of Antietam.

Capts. Mallory, Second United States Artillery, and F. A. Dietze, Eleventh United States Infantry, are detailed for duty at the Military Academy, the former as Inspector of Artillery, and the latter as Assistant Professor of French. Commander Wm. Reynolds has been ordered to the command of the storeship Vermont, at Port Royal. Acting Volunteer Lieut. Wm. H. Ware, has been detached from the same vessel and ordered to return North.

Assistant Paymaster James P. Woodbury has been ordered to the iron-clad steamer Passaic.

Dr. Wm. Gale, of Brooklyn, N. Y., has been appointed Acting Assistant Surgeon, and ordered to the Monticello.

IMPORTANT FROM THE FRONT.

The Pursuit of Stuart's Cavalry by Gen. Stahl.

A Large Body of the Enemy Routed at Thoroughfare Gap.

SEVEN OF OUR WAGONS CAPTURED.

The Rebel Pickets Within Two Miles of Centreville.

LEESBURGH EVACUATED.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Oct. 19—10 P. M.

By special dispatch from the TIMES correspondent at Centreville we learn the following particulars:

Gen. Stahl left Centreville on Wednesday with a force of cavalry and artillery, for the purpose of finding and fighting Stuart, who was known to be moving south from Leesburgh, east of Bull Run Hills, and threatening our advance. At night we concentrated at Chantilly, and on Thursday morning advanced to Aldie.

Stuart declined the challenge, and fell back. There was skirmishing with the enemy's videttes, and some prisoners were captured.

On Friday morning Gen. Stahl advanced toward Ashby's Gap, driving in the pickets of a force of infantry, cavalry and artillery under Gen. Hill, occupying passes in the vicinity. At New-Salem he captured a number of pickets from the rebel force at Warrenton. After a brief rest, Gen. Stahl advanced to White Plains and encamped for the night, throwing forward pickets to Thoroughfare Gap, and sending a small force to look after a supply train of seven wagons five loaded with forage and two with commissary stores, which had left Centreville on the same day for the use of his command. The train was found and supposed to be safe. It was halted at New-Market about 2 o'clock on Saturday morning, in the main street, and about 6½ o'clock was captured by five hundred North Carolina cavalry, with fifteen of our soldiers and six teamsters. The rebels conveyed the booty to Warrenton.

On learning this loss, Gen. Stahl moved forward hoping to recapture the train. The enemy appeared intending to occupy Thoroughfare Gap to prevent his passage, and met our advance under Maj. Knox before we had penetrated far. Maj. Knox charged at the head of his force, and after a short skirmish the enemy fled. Our forces pursued to the vicinity of Warrentown, but after vainly endeavoring to entice the enemy to come out from their position and fight, terminated the reconnoissance by falling back to Centreville, which place they reached about 1 o'clock this morning. We captured about one hundred prisoners, twelve horses and one caisson, and lost, besides the train, two horses killed.

Our scouts now report rebel pickets within two miles of Centreville, and a cavalry force at Bristow Station, to and from which the rebels are moving trains.

On Friday, a force under Lieut.-Col. Kaiser, of the First New-Jersey Cavalry, left the main body at Aldie to make a reconnoissance to Leesburgh, and returned to Centreville this morning, having seen no enemy in force, Leesburgh having just been evacuated.

IMPORTANT FROM PORT ROYAL.

The Expedition to Jacksonville.

DESTRUCTION OF THE REBEL BATTERIES.

CAPTURE OF A STEAMBOAT.

Another Speech from Gen. Mitchell.

His Policy and Sentiments on the Negro Question.

PORT ROYAL, Tuesday, Oct. 14, 1862.

The return of Brig.-Gen. Brannan and his command from Jacksonville yesterday puts me in full possession of the particulars concerning the successful expedition against that place, and as only an incomplete account has gone North, I shall send a brief and connected narrative of the circumstances.

The expedition left Hilton Head on the afternoon of the 30th ultimo, consisting of the Pennsylvania Forty-seventh Regiment, Col. Gage; the Connecticut Seventh Regiment, Col. Hawley; a section of the First Connecticut Battery, under Lieut. Carson, and a detachment of the First Massachusetts Cavalry, under Capt. Cram, making a total effective force of 1,573. The troops were embarked on the steamers Ben Deford, Boston, Cosmopolitan and Neptune, and arrived off the bar of the St. John's River early on the morning following their departure, but were unable to enter the river until 2 P. M. in consequence of the shallowness of the channel. There the expedition was joined by the gunboats Paul Jones, Capt. Stringham, commanding the fleet; Conemaugh, Capt. Woodhull; Water Witch, Lieut.-Com. Pendergrast; E. B. Hale, Lieut.-Com. Smith; Uncas, Lieut.-Com. Crane; and the Patrona, Lieut.-Com. Usher. The same afternoon three gunboats were sent up to feel the position of the battery on the Bluff, and were immediately and warmly engaged, the enemy apparently having a number of heavy guns in his works.

The debarkation of our troops was effected at a place known as Mayport Mills, situated a short distance from the entrance of the river, and all the men, horses, rations and arms, were on shore by 9 o'clock on the evening of the 1st.

The country between this point and St. John's Bluff presented great difficulties in the transportation of troops, being intersected with impassable swamps and unfordable creeks, and presenting an alternative of a march of forty miles without land transportation, to turn the head of the creek, or to reland up the river at a strongly-guarded position of the enemy. On further search, a landing place was found for the infantry at about 2 o'clock on the morning of the 2d, at a place called Buckhorn Creek, between Pablo and Mount Pleasant Creeks, but the swampy nature of the ground made it impracticable to land the cavalry and artillery at that point. The gunboats here rendered valuable assistance by transporting troops and sending light howitzers in launches to cover the landing.

Col. Gage, with the entire infantry and boat howitzers, was ordered immediately forward to the head of Mount Pleasant Creek, to secure a position to cover the landing of the cavalry and artillery. The movement was executed skillfully, surprising and putting to flight the rebel pickets on that creek. This rapid movement to Mount Pleasant Creek, and the landing of the troops at Buck Horn Creek, was very fortunate, as it caused the abandonment of the guns, if he had any, to prevent our advance. Their pickets retired in such haste and trepidation as to leave their camps standing, their arms, and even a great portion of their clothing behind them, and only rallied themselves because of the intricate character of the ground and their superior knowledge of the country.

On the morning of the 2d, the artillery and cavalry were in readiness at the head of Mount Pleasant Creek, two miles from the enemy's batteries at St. John's Bluff; and here the statements of persons belonging to the locality, though conflicting and unreliable in the extreme, appeared to agree in placing the strength of the rebels at 1,200 cavalry and infantry, in addition to the batteries, which they represented as containing nine heavy pieces. Under these circumstances, Gen. Brannan deemed it expedient, on consultation with Capt. Sterrman, to send the Cosmopolitan to Fernandina for reinforcements from the garrison of that place, and three hundred men, of the Ninth Maine Regiment, were sent down on the following morning.

Later in the day, at Gen. Brannan's request, Capt Sterrman sent three gunboats to feel the position of the enemy, shelling them as they advanced, when the batteries were found to be vacated, and Lieut. Smith, of the Hale, sent a boat on shore and raised the American flag, finding the rebel flag in the battery. The naval force then retained possession until the arrival of the troops, who immediately advanced from the position on Mount Pleasant Creek. On approaching the enemy's position on the Bluff, it was found to be of great strength, possessing a heavy and effective armament, consisting of two eight-inch columbiads, two eight-inch siege howitzers, two eight-inch seacoast howitzers, and two rifled guns, supplied with ammunition in abundance, shot, shell, tools and camp equipage.

The works were skillfully and carefully constructed, and the strength of the position was greatly enhanced by the natural features of the ground, it being only approachable on the land side, through a winding ravine immediately under the guns of the position, and, from the narrowness of the river and the elevation of the bluff, rendering fighting by the gunboats most difficult and dangerous. Most of the guns were mounted on complete traverse circles, and, indeed, taking everything into consideration, there is no doubt that a small party of determined men might have maintained the position for a considerable time against even a larger force than we brought against it.

On the day following our occupation of these works the guns were dismounted and removed on board the steamer Neptune, together with the shot and shell, and removed to Hilton Head. The powder was all used in destroying the batteries.

As soon as we had got possession of the Bluff, Capt Sterrman and his gunboats went to Jacksonville for the purpose of destroying all boats and intercepting the passage of the rebel troops across the river, and on the 5th Gen. Brannan also went up to Jacksonville in the steamer Ben Deford, with a force of 785 infantry, and occupied the town. On either side of the river were considerable crops of grain, which would have been destroyed or removed, but this was found impracticable for want of means of transportation. At Yellow Bluff we found that the rebels had a position in readiness to secure seven heavy guns, which they appeared to have lately evacuated. Jacksonville we found to be nearly deserted, there being only a few old men, women, and children in the town. Soon after our arrival, however, while establishing our picket line, a few cavalry appeared on the outskirts, but they quickly left again. The few inhabitants were in a wretched condition, almost destitute of food, and Gen. Brannan, at their request, brought a large number up to Hilton Head to save them from starvation, together with 278 negroes—men, women, and children, who had sought our protection.

On the 6th inst., hearing that some rebel steamers were secreted in the creeks up the river, the Darlington, with 100 men of the Forty-seventh Pennsylvania, under Capt. Yard, and two 24-pound light howitzers and twenty-five men, commanded by Lieut. Williams, United States Navy, under a convoy of gunboats, was sent up to cut them out. This party returned on the 8th, having penetrated the river a distance of 130 miles, and bringing with them the steamer Governor Milton, which they captured in a creek, about twenty-seven miles from the town of Enterprise.

Finding that the Cosmopolitan, which had been sent to Hilton Head for provisions, had struck heavily on crossing the bar, on her return to the St. John's River, and was temporarily disabled for service, the Seventh Connecticut Regiment was sent to Hilton Head on the Boston, with the request that she should return for the remainder of the troops, and she got back on the 11th, when the command was reembarked, reaching this place yesterday, excepting one company of the Forty-seventh Pennsylvania, which is left for the protection of the Cosmopolitan. The accident to this valuable steamer is severe. A large hole was made in her bottom and she filled, but she will not be a wreck, as was at first feared.

Gen. Brannan thinks it evident, from his experience on this expedition, that the rebel troops in this portion of the country have not sufficient organization and discipline, in consequence of their living in separate and distinct companies, to sustain any position, but seem rather to devote themselves to a system of guerrilla warfare. This was exemplified by the advance on St. John's Bluff, where, after evacuating the fort, they continued to hover on our flank, and front, but did not come near enough to make their fire effective. We learned at Jacksonville that they commenced evacuating the Bluff immediately after our surprise of their pickets at Mount Pleasant Creek.

On Sunday the negro church at Hilton Head was dedicated to Divine service. Gen. Hunter authorized the construction of the building, and before he left the work was nearly finished. The situation of the church is good; the appearance is neat, though plain as a Quaker meeting-house, and in all respects the building meets the requirements of the case. Three hundred persons may be comfortably seated. The Pastor is a black man from Savannah, named Abram Murchison, who has been in due form ordained a Baptist minister by the army Chaplains, and installed in office. Abram, though able to read and write, is not polished in his manners; but what he lacks in culture is more than compensated in earnest eloquence, a vigorous and clear expression of his views, deep piety, and a powerful influence over the colored people. The dedication exercises were interesting in themselves, being conducted by Rev. H. N. Hudson, Chaplain of the New-York Volunteer Engineer Regiment, an eloquentist of celebrity. Gen. Mitchell was present, with the members of his Staff, and, by invitation, addressed the audience. His remarks were pointed, impressive and instructive. They were listened to attentively, and indorsed with nods of approbation from young and old. I do not think that a portion of the TIMES could be better filled than with this frank and unmistakable expression of Gen. Mitchell's views on the Slavery question. He said:

"I have been requested to say a few words to you by your teacher, who is a good man. Any good man I like, regardless of color. I respect him as much whether he is black or white. If he be a bad man I shall treat him as such whether he is white or black. Most of you know that I have talked to all my soldiers since I came here, and how I am talking to you who are another set of soldiers, who have not yet arms in their hands, but who are under my protection and guidance, and in whom I take deep interest. With your past life I fully sympathize. I know and understand it all. I was reared in the midst of Slavery, born in Kentucky, and know all about it. While there are many things connected with it that are pleasant, to which you will testify, there are vast many other things which are not pleasant, and I think that God intends all men shall be free, because he intends that all men shall serve him with their whole heart. I think this is true. I am not certain. I don't know. Under any condition we can all love and serve God. That privilege cannot be taken away. I care not how savage and wicked the master may be, he cannot prevent you from praying in the midst of the night, and God hears and answers the prayer of all, slave or free.

But it seems to me that there is a new time coming for you colored people; a better day is dawning for you oppressed and down-trodden blacks. I don't know that this is true, but I hope that the door is being opened for your deliverance. And now, how happy you should ponder these words. If now you are unwilling to help yourselves nobody will be willing to help you. You must trust yourselves to the guidance of those who have had better opportunities and have acquired superior wisdom. If you would be carried through this crisis successfully. And I believe the good God will bless your efforts, and lift you up to a higher level than you have yet occupied, so that you and your children may become educated and industrious citizens. You must organize yourselves into families. Husbands must love their wives and children, clinging to them and turning from all others, and feeling that their highest object in life, next to serving the good God, is to do all they can for their families, working for them continually.

Good colored friends, you have a great work to do, and you are in a position of responsibility. The whole North, all the people in the Free States, are looking at you and the experiment now tried in your behalf with the deepest interest. This experiment is to give you freedom, position, home and your own families—wives, property, your own soil. You shall till and cultivate your own crops; you shall gather and sell the products of your industry for your own benefit; you shall own your own savings, and you shall be able to feel that God is prospering you from day to day and from year to year, and raising you to a higher level of goodness, religion and a nobler life.

Supposing you fail down here; that will be an end of the whole matter. It is like attaching a cable to a stranded vessel, and all the strength that can be mustered is put upon this rope to haul her off. If this only rope breaks the vessel is lost. God help you all and help us all to help you. If you are idle, vicious, indolent and negligent, you will fail, and your last hope is gone; if you are not faithful you rivet eternally the fetters upon those who to-day are fastened down by fetters and suffer by the driver's goad. You have in your hands the rescuing of those sufferers over whose sorrows you mourn continually. If you fail, what a dreadful responsibility it will be when you come to die to feel that the only great opportunity you had for serving yourselves and your oppressed race was allowed to slip.

And you, women, you must be careful of your children. You must teach them to be industrious, cleanly, obedient, and dutiful at all times. You must keep your houses neat and tidy, working all day, if necessary, to have them in the best possible condition, always thinking and contriving to make them cleaner and more comfortable. When your husband comes home from the labors and fatigues of the day, always have something good and nice for his supper, and speak kindly to him, for these little acts of love and attention will bring you happiness and joy.

And when you men go out to work, you must labor with diligence and zeal. It seems to me, had I the stimulus to work that you have that I could labor like a giant. Now you know who I am. My first duty here is to deal justly; second, to love mercy, and third, to walk humbly. First, justly—I shall endeavor to get you to do your duty faithfully. If you do it shall reward you; and if you refuse, then what comes next? Why, the wicked must be punished and made to do right. I will take the bad man by the throat and force him to his duty. I do not mean that I will take hold of him with my own hands, but with the strong arm of military power. Now do we understand each other? I am working for you already. I am told by your Superintendent that a gang of fifty men are building your houses at the rate of six a day. These houses are to make you more comfortable. You are to have a piece of ground, which you can call your own, to raise your own garden truck, and you may work for the Government for good wages. And you women must make your houses shine; you must plaster them and whitewash them, and gradually get furniture in your cabins, and a cooking-stove. I have arranged in such a way that you will get your clothing cheaper and better than before, and you are to have a school for your children. And you must have flowers in your gardens and blossoms before your doors. You will see in a little while how much happier you will be made. Are you not willing to work for this? Yes, God helping, you will all work. This is only the experiment, but if you are successful, this plan will go all through the country, and we will have answered the question that has puzzled all good, thinking men in the world for one hundred years. They have asked, "What will you do with the black man after liberating him?" We will show them what we will do. We will make him a useful, industrious citizen. We will give him his family, his wife, his children—give him the earnings of the sweat of his brow, and as a man, we will give him what the Lord ordained him to have.

I shall watch everything closely respecting this experiment. It is something to be permanent—more than for a day, more than for a year. Upon you depends whether this mighty result shall be worked out, and the day of jubilee come to God's enslaved people."

The white people have also had the advantage of religious instruction offered them during the past two Sabbaths, for the first time since the military occupation of North Carolina set. An upper floor of one of the large commissary buildings has been appropriated as a place of worship, and the various regimental chaplains are to officate alternately. The first century's discourse was delivered by the Rev. H. N. Hudson, (Episcopal,) of the Volunteer Engineer Regiment, and day before yesterday the Rev. Dr. Tomlinson, (Methodist,) Chaplain of the New-York Forty-seventh, favored us with a sermon. Gen. Mitchell, who has manifested these religious privileges, is himself a regular attendant on the services.

The propeller Trade Wind, Capt. Doughty, was towed into this port last week by the gunboat Fox, crippled by the bursting of her cylinder, when in latitude 35° north, longitude 75° west, on her voyage from New-York to New-Orleans, carrying a United States mail, and a cargo of military goods. The damage is too great to be repaired here with our limited facilities, and she awaits a chance of being towed to New-York. Mr. Rankin, of Philadelphia, chief engineer of the vessel, was severely scalded by the accident. The mails will be forwarded to New-Orleans by the first naval supply vessel going to that port.

The gunboat Quaker City, at noon on Saturday last ran ashore on the bar at North Edisto. Fears were entertained for the safety of the vessel, and the army steamers Locust Point and Reserve were sent to her aid. She was, however, out of danger when they reached her.

The work of organizing the troops in this Department into brigades has been commenced by Gen. Mitchell, with a view to more system, and enhanced mobility in future operations. Brig.-Gen. Terry has been relieved of the command of the post of the Florida Coast, and assigned to the Second Brigade, which is composed of the Seventy-sixth and Ninety-seventh Pennsylvania, the Seventh Connecticut, and the Third New-Hampshire Regiments.

IMPORTANT FROM WESTERN VIRGINIA.

The Rebel Forces Reported to have Gone to East Tennessee.

CHILLICOTHE, OHIO, Saturday, Oct. 18.

Rev. Mr. Woodhull, Chaplain of the Fourth Virginia Volunteers, released by the rebels a few days since, reached Point Pleasant to-day, having walked all the way from Charleston, on the Kanawha.

He reports that all the rebel infantry and artillery have left Western Virginia, after having secured large quantities of salt from the wells in the valley.

It is conjectured that they have gone to East Tennessee, to reinforce General Bragg.

There are now no rebels in the Valley, except Col. Jenkins' guerrillas.

This intelligence is perfectly reliable.

THE REBELS IN THE SOUTHWEST.

Price Rallying his Scattered Rebels at Holly Springs.

CAIRO, Ill., Saturday, Oct. 18.

Gen. Price is said to be gathering a large number of troops at Holly Springs, with the view of attacking some point on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad.

There is a rumor here, apparently not well authenticated, that an attack has been made by the rebels on the Federal troops at Island No. 10.

No boat has arrived from Memphis in three days, and trouble is feared on the river.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Return of Gov. Stanly—A Gunboat Recovered.

The United States gunboat Seminole, which was snagged and sunk a short time since in the Neuse, just above this city, has, by the indefatigable exertions of her crew, been raised, repaired and is in good fighting trim, and her crew are anxious for a brush with the enemy of our Nation's honor.

FIFTEEN MONTHS AT THE SOUTH.

Letters from Mr. Wm. Henry Hurlbert to Hon. Anson S. Barlow.

LETTER SIXTH.

NEW-YORK, Friday, Oct. 17, 1862.

Dear Sir: Before the commencement of the secession of the city of [illegible], as a prominent social city of the South during secession, I pass rapidly enough to remark upon the state and prospects of the Southern army, and to observe what I think is fair in my way to make upon the prospects of things in the Confederacy.

I have already touched upon these points in the course of previous letters, but their importance demands a more emphatic exposition than I have hitherto been able to give them, particularly while my own convictions do not agree with the popular impression, that the military strength of the Confederate States has diminished with the progress of the war. As I can see no alternative before us save the recognition of the Southern Confederacy within the limits which may be imposed by the war on the one hand, or the absolute subjugation of the South in the interest of universal freedom upon the other; and as the actual support of the Northern people certainly is not such as to encourage the acceptance of the first of these solutions, it is proximately important, if it be not, that we should form and keep steadily before ourselves the clearest and truest notions of the force we are to encounter in the prosecution of the war?

I may be wrong, but it appears to me that up to this time the strength of the Southern army has been studied at the North, rather with the object of making the results of the investigation conduce to the elevation or depression of certain military reputations among ourselves, than with any just appreciation of the importance of correct knowledge upon this head, to the formation of a just public opinion upon the policy of the nation. When a General is assailed for his conduct of a campaign, it is an excellent thing for his friends to propagate the impression that he has been contending with forces numerically inferior to his own; while it is just as obviously an excellent thing for his enemies to maintain and prove by "figures which will not lie," that he has shrunk from overwhelming an army far weaker than his own in numbers as in equipment. But the net result of all these arithmetical polemics is to result a substantial fact of prime significance to the welfare of the whole country, to the low and debased tone of a partisan opinion. Surely, nothing can be more disastrous to a National cause than such a state of things; and, as I shall venture upon setting forth a few figures in the course of this letter, I beg you distinctly to understand that in so doing I do not mean to identify myself with any critical view whatever of our National campaigns. The reasons for the failure or the success of great military operations, conducted upon the scale of those which our age and country is witnessing, never lie wholly upon the surface of passing events. It is the province of history to discover and to weigh them, when time which smothers ashes upon all the angry heats of human life shall have made investigation calmly possible. The force of the enemy against whom another General at a particular moment may have contended, as compared with his own, is but one of these reasons; and it should be remembered that even in respect to this important point, it is more difficult to obtain positive satisfaction while a war is actually waging, than after it has passed with all its records into the "dusky crypt."

The first Southern troops whom I saw under arms were the Confederates, under the command of Gen.—then Brigadier-General—JOSEPH JOHNSTON, at Harper's Ferry, in June, 1861. I shall not easily forget the shock of reality with which the terrible fact of civil war came upon me, when I first crossed the long bridge at the ferry, was halted by a sentinel in fighting trim and with a fighting face, and saw from the camp of a Mississippi regiment upon the heights, a flag that was not the "Stars and Stripes," waving defiantly over white tents and gleaming cannon.

These troops were mainly from Tennessee and Mississippi. In appearance they were the flower of their States; most of them quiet in their demeanor, intelligent, vigorous young men, in the prime of life. They were respectably equipped, but the air of the citizen had not yet passed off from their bearing and their physiognomy. The corporal who escorted me from the bridge to Gen. JOHNSTON's headquarters, was a College graduate, a Mississippian, who told me, with no air of fanfronade, but with a quiet earnestness which was too genuine not to be impressive, that every male member of his family had volunteered for the war.

The Southern forces at Harper's Ferry were currently estimated at that time in the Northern papers at from fifteen to seventeen thousand men. Gen. JOHNSTON himself informed me that he had but seven thousand five hundred men under his orders, and he added, with a smile, "I only hope that you exaggerate the forces of the Federals as much as they exaggerate ours." Nothing could exceed the Spartan simplicity of the Confederate General's housekeeping at headquarters, or the resolute, business-like air of himself and staff. I do not think I transgress any rule of propriety in quoting a remark made upon Gen. MCCLELLAN at this time, by his future antagonist of Williamsburgh and the Seven Pines. Gen. MCCLELLAN was an object of interest just then at Harper's Ferry, as he had commenced that successful campaign in Western Virginia which had its influence in hastening JOHNSTON's evacuation of Harper's Ferry, and was to make MCCLELLAN himself Commander-in-Chief of all the National armies.

"I know Gen. MCCLELLAN well," said Gen. JOHNSTON, "and I respect his ability. He is certainly the best military critic in America; but," he went on, after a moment's pause, and with an indescribable twinkle in his clear, penetrating eyes, "but criticism is one thing, and achievement is another, and I don't know that the qualities which make it may succeed in the one are exactly those to carry him through in the other."

From Harper's Ferry to Richmond I passed large bodies of troops moving on their way to and from Manassas Junction—in all, perhaps, from twelve to fifteen thousand men, a majority of them fresh from the South, and almost all of them wearing the comparatively spruce "new" look of the forces I had seen at the Ferry. Richmond itself was a depot of transmission, and as such was filled literally to overflowing with the crusaders of Georgia, the Carolinas and the Gulf, the daily arrivals more than balancing the effect of the daily departures, since transportation could not be furnished upon the Virginia Central line, as Mr. TOOMBS informed me, for quite two thousand men per day.

The received estimate in Richmond at that time, June 5, 1861, of troops which had actually reached Virginia, since the publication of Mr. LINCOLN's proclamation, made the number about forty thousand men. I do not consider the estimate excessive; nor will you, I think, Sir, when you reflect that very few days had passed since the 20th of April without bringing into the city of Richmond at least two trains of troops each from the Southern and the Western lines. These trains averaged, as I counted them upon various railroads throughout the seaboard South, from ten to twelve cars apiece, and the cars being generally filled to their utmost capacity, it will hardly be [illegible]

[illegible] I think we may arrive at the conclusion that, by the date of the first battle at Bull Run, July 18, 1861, the Confederates had actually assembled under arms, in Virginia, about eighty thousand men, of whom probably sixty thousand were disposed throughout Eastern Virginia on the day of the great battle of Manassas Plains, July 21, 1861. This would give us, as the proximate effective force of the Confederates in that battle, not far from forty thousand men, a number which does not vary materially from a reasonable mean between the exalted estimates of the victorious rebel army at the North, and the force reported by Gens. BEAUREGARD and JOHNSTON as actually under their orders. The victory of Manassas was followed, as I have already had occasion to observe, by a decline rather than by an advance in the military preparations of the South. Camps of instruction were formed, indeed, in the various States, and efforts were made from time to time to fill up the ranks of regiments actually in the field, as they were worn away by disease and desertion, and the slow corrosion of inactive camp life. But the urgency of the case appeared to the majority of the Southern people to have passed, and a general disposition grew up throughout the country to wait upon Providence and foreign intervention, rather than to abandon for life in the field the many opportunities which the sudden effects produced by the war upon the industry of the South, offered to private enterprise and activity.

From the army at Manassas I have reports, proceeding from a quarter to which it is not possible for me to refuse my confidence, so late as the middle of November, 1861; and in these reports I find the force of the Confederates at that point estimated at no more than thirty-eight thousand effectives. I feel equally confident that at the same time, and down to the day of the attack upon Hilton Head, the force in and around Charleston, for the defence of that point, did not exceed four thousand men. An officer who was present at Fort Walker at the time of its fall, used this expression in writing to a friend whom he could have had no interest in deceiving: "We had just about one artilleryman for every one of the enemy's guns." That the great Confederate Army of the West to which Gen. ALBERT SYDNEY JOHNSTON was assigned, existed chiefly on paper, we learn from the correspondence of that officer, published after his death upon the field of Shiloh. His main stronghold of Bowling Green, which was supposed at the North to be garrisoned by an army equal to that of JOSEPH JOHNSTON and BEAUREGARD at Manassas, really sheltered behind its work a force of at most fifteen thousand men. When Brig.-Gen. WISE was ordered in January, 1862, to the defence of Roanoke Island, he could not assemble for this important service a force exceeding twenty-five hundred men. It is true that after sacrificing both Gen. FLOYD and Gen. WISE to his hatred of both, and to their own reciprocal animosity, in Western Virginia, where nothing but the timely supervision of Gen. LEE saved these Kilkenny captains from counteracting each other into mutual destruction, President DAVIS was suspected of sending WISE to Roanoke Island expressly in the hope that his expedition might terminate either in Fort Warren or in a locality less frigid but more final. The refusal of the War Department to allow Gen. HUGER, then lying idle at Norfolk with fifteen thousand men, to forward reinforcements to WISE, certainly gave some color of verisimilitude to the charge.

But I doubt whether the resources of the Confederates in Virginia at that time would have permitted them to strengthen WISE materially from any other point than HUGER's garrison at Norfolk.

With Spring and the conscription act came a new order of things, and from March to August, 1861, the number of the Confederate forces in the field has been steadily augmenting. I have reason to believe that when the Army of the Potomac joined the seven thousand men of MAGRUDER's command at Yorktown, and began that celebrated retreat which the battle of Williamsburgh afflicted without interrupting it, the combined forces under the command of Gen. JOSEPH JOHNSTON amounted to 67,000 men. On the 1st of June, the second day of the battle on the Chickahominy, known by the enemy as the "Seven Pines," and by our own army as "Fair Oaks," I have similar reason to believe that 85,000 rations were issued to the Confederate army before Richmond—a supply from which it is reasonable to infer that the Confederate lines were on that day held by about 75,000 effective men, nearly the whole of whom must have been thrown forward to the front engaged, since I have positive information that on the same day there were but twenty-five hundred Southern troops on the south side of the James River, at Drury's Bluff, or, as we call it, "Fort Darling."

Of these troops many, of course, were newly raised, and the discipline of the whole army had just received a severe blow from the reorganization consequent upon the expiration of the twelve months' term of service of a large number of the regiments in April and May. Upon this reorganization, many of the best line officers in the Southern regiments were thrown out of commission, their places being filled by others, who had distinguished themselves by good-fellowship and good-nature, rather than by capacity for command. So serious were the effects of this change, almost inevitable in any volunteer service, that the army of Gen. JOHNSTON was really almost broken up in consequence of the battles of May 31 and June 1, and I ought to say, to my great astonishment I heard numbers of Southern officers attribute the subsequent consolidation of their army to the fortunate chance which had thrown Gen. JOHNSTON temporarily out of command, and consigned the Confederate forces to the charge of Gen. ROBERT E. LEE. I do not pretend to discuss the justice of this impression.—I merely state that it existed, and that I heard experienced officers assert that, with all its gallantry and skill in the field, Gen. JOSEPH JOHNSTON had suffered the organization of his army to fall into the most deplorable state of confusion and corruption.

Be this as it may, I could not but perceive a notable improvement in the administration of military affairs at the South during the months subsequent to the battle of the Seven Pines. Concentration and energy seemed suddenly to have taken the place of a vague self-confidence. The recruiting service was pushed, as my own observation proved to me in Richmond, and as letters and newspaper accounts from different parts of the South concurred to show, with extraordinary zeal, and but a very ordinary degree of respect for public law or private rights. By the date of the great battles of Richmond, the army of Gen. LEE around that city was estimated by competent inquirers at 90,000 effective men, independently of Maj.-Gen. JACKSON's column, which came into action in those battles on the third day after they began, and was computed to possess an effective strength of 35,000 men.

Now certainly no such army as this had ever before been assembled by the Confederates; nor do I believe that the entire fighting force of the South, east of the Mississippi River, had ever at any time previous to July 1, 1862, been equal to the effective strength of the Army of Virginia at that date.

Were I to hitch a general estimate, approximate [illegible] correct, of the Southern force in the field at different epochs of the existing war, I should be tempted to rate it as follows:

JULY 21, 1861.

Force in Virginia	60,000
In all the south	65,000
Total	125,000

Of these a large proportion were old militia organizations, most of which were not regimented at all, and the majority of which were armed with muskets of an obsolete pattern.

FEBRUARY 22, 1862.

Strength as reported by President DAVIS	200,000
Probably effective	150,000

AUGUST 15, 1862.

From the Potomac River to Richmond	125,000
At Richmond	10,000
In South Carolina and Georgia	35,000
In the remainder of the South, west of the Mississippi River	80,000
Total	250,000

Assuming my estimate to be nearly correct, and I cannot bring myself to believe that the really effective Southern force now in the field can very far exceed this estimate, you will yet see that the Confederates now have on foot an army numerically twice as strong as that which defended their territory with success twelve months ago. In all other elements of efficiency this army is incomparably superior to its predecessor. It is superior in point of discipline; it is penetrated with that genuine military spirit which springs from military experience and from frequent successes in the field; it is thoroughly well armed, with a formidable artillery, partly of native and partly of foreign manufacture. The strange Chinese theory on which we seem to have proceeded to an extraordinary degree, in our own military organization, that war is a question of mere numbers and masses of men, has found small favor at the South. The volunteer element being now practically fused in the fires of the conscription, the Southern Generals have at last been able to create an army manageable by military intellects and obedient to a strictly unpolitical system of warfare.

That this army is thoroughly well equipped it would probably be rash to assert. In certain departments of the service, as particularly in the Medical and Quartermaster's Departments, the Southern army has long suffered from inadequacy of material and incompetency of organization. Anything more dreadful than the scenes which I witnessed in some of the improvised hospitals of Richmond, after the severe battles of the Peninsula and the Chickahominy, it would not be easy to imagine. The detailed losses of the Confederates in the battles of the Seven Pines, as published in the Richmond papers and computed by myself, amounted to 6,237 men killed and wounded, full reports of casualties still lacking from more than twenty corps known to have been in action. After the seven days' battles the Confederate losses were estimated by the best Southern authorities at nearly 16,000 killed and wounded.

Now, upon both these occasions, it must be remembered, thousands of wounded men were thrown upon the medical resources of an army scarcely a year old, and of a city never remarkably rich or populous. Naturally a vast amount of misery and suffering was the result. At one large hospital in Main-street, for example, the store of Messrs. KENT, PAINE & Co., the "Stewart's" of Richmond, nearly seven hundred patients were crowded into a four-story warehouse, hastily prepared for their reception. They lay in rows upon the floors, and were attended by a force of nurses so inadequate that sometimes for twenty-four hours at a time the dead would be left in their cots beside the living. Nor was this all. The culinary department of the hospital was established in the basement, in a space partitioned off for that purpose, the rest of the vaulting being used as a receptacle for the corpses of those who succumbed to their wounds in the wards above. The burial of Confederate troops being farmed out on contract to some foreigners in Richmond, who thought more of their profits than of the "patriots" by whom those profits came, the horrible spectacle was often to be witnessed at the rear of the hospitals, and in the Hollywood Cemetery, of piles of reeking coffins left lying in the summer sun for hours together, till the scanty force employed by these ghouls of the Government could find time to shovel their human spoil decently out of sight.

Nay, on one occasion, I remember that an open furniture wagon was driven into Richmond, filled with Confederate dead, piled one upon another, without so much as a cloth to cover them, and that this horrible hearse traversed the city for nearly three hours, in broad daylight, before its owners ascertained precisely who was to pay them for hiding away the wreck of mortality thus brutally hawked from Department to Department.

Dreadful as such details are, not only in themselves, but in all that they suggest of human suffering and human heartlessness, I repeat my conviction, that in all the essentials of military strength, the Confederacy is more formidable today than it has ever yet been. It is formidable in the mere number of its armies, in the passion which animates its soldiery, in the capacity of its commanders, and in the development of its resources.

To deal with it on the theory of its exhaustion or its vacillation of purpose to-day, in my judgment, will be to invite swift ruin upon our heads and upon the heads of our children's children.

I am, most truly, your obedient servant,

WM. HENRY HURLBERT.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

—Mystery is the great staple of novel writers, especially of those of the female persuasion. These latter transfer the veil from their own faces to shroud the characters they invent. At every turn and corner of their stories they mystify the reader by all manner of weak devices, pointing in a different direction from that they actually intend to take, flitting before you with simulated lameness, like the lapwing, to lead you away from the nest where their young brood of callow secrets lie. Of this art, Mrs. HENRY WOOD is the high handmaiden. She moves in a more mysterious way her wonders to perform than our own PERRANDO does. Her characters go through her stories as ships in crowded seas glide around in a fog, ringing bells to keep out of each other's way and carefully avoiding a meeting. Her last work, very properly christened The Mystery, is published by PETERSON & BRO., of Philadelphia, from advance sheets, for which a fabulous price is said to have been paid. The story is an ingenious one, and well managed in the main. A murder is committed, without any adequate motive on the part of the murderer, and the blood is sprinkled around in such a mysterious manner, that it is difficult to fasten it to the skirts of any one. A little girl, in a very innocent manner, manages to be everywhere where she should not be, and to hear everything that was least intended for her to hear. Were she not more retentive of talk than most young ladies are, she might set a great deal of doubt and trouble at rest in the early part of the story; but she preserves a most remarkable reticence, and permits the characters to go knocking their heads against each other, as awkward people do in dancing the Lancers. She is a very remarkable little girl, indeed, and eventually a most exceptional young lady. Truth compels the admission that Mrs. WOOD weaves quite an exciting and interesting chain of narrative from what seems at first glance to be rather slender material, though most readers will [illegible] that is behind the mask long before the author removes it.

—We are glad to see that the [illegible] children up the hill of knowledge by pleasant paths, instead of over barren uninteresting roads, is so rapidly obtaining favor. The HARPERS publish a First Book in Chemistry—by WORTHINGTON HOOKER, M. D.—that illustrates our meaning capitally. It is interesting to a child as a fairy tale, and the chemical changes effected and treated of are much more wonderful than any magical transformations ever dreamed of. Reading this little book, if we judge the youthful mind aright, will so interest the child in the science that it will study it of its own free will. Dr. HOOKER's language is simple in the extreme, and entirely within the comprehension of those who have not yet got beyond words of three syllables, and yet full and explicit enough to give even a village pedagogue ample understanding of the subjects and experiments whereof he treats. The book, of course, does not open all the paths of chemistry to eager little feet, but it carries the young student quite as far as he will care to go until he is prepared to plunge into the investigation of the meaning of those curious combinations of capital letters which appear so mysterious to the uninitiated, and occasionally prove puzzling to aged apothecaries. When will that millennium for children dawn in which all school books shall be conceived and written in a like sensible manner?

—TICKNOR & FIELDS have contracted a habit of making the best looking books that issue from the American press. How they do it is a mystery we shall not now attempt to solve, but certain it is that they continue to give quaint graces to their books—touching the edges with vermilion or the backs with faint lines of gold, setting up the letters like ten-pins, or slanting them with the rakish air of one that is fumbling for his latch-key at late hours of nights, tapering off chapters so that literally—whether figuratively or not—they have "point," and doing a dozen other things that give to their publications a style, an individuality, that other publishers vainly strive to imitate.

Two notable instances of this peculiarity are found in a brace of books fresh from their press, Country Living and Country Thinking, and The Patience of Hope. Paper delicately tinted as lily leaves, yet firm and smooth as parchment, type large and clear faced, type that you can read without weariness to the eyes or vexation to the soul. And the books themselves are well worthy the dainty taste that has been bestowed on their dress.

Country Living and Country Thinking is a compilation of papers and essays by "Gail Hamilton," which originally appeared, we believe, in the pages of the Atlantic. "Gail Hamilton," of course, is a pen-name; whether the real name be Jones, Brown or Smith, whether the author be masculine, feminine or epicene in gender, are points wholly aside from the question at issue. Gail Hamilton has given us some of the pleasantest essays we have had for many a day; brimming with a humor that never degenerates into coarseness, a sprightliness that does not savor of affectation. The man that can read "Moving," "My Garden," or "My Birds" without laughing—not a great horse laugh, but one of those pleasant little cachinnations where we chuckle to ourselves, and wink at our neighbors—that man has no merriment in his soul. Some of the more serious essays are a trifle too long drawn out, but this we pardon in that they are so mainly good.

The Patience of Hope, by the author of A Present Heaven, is presented, with an introduction by JOHN G. WHITTIER. It is a book full of solemn beauty, replete with the noblest Christian thought; a book to be read at twilight, when nature pauses with hushed footsteps in the antechambers of night, and man turns from the busy duties of the day to hold communion with himself. It steals upon the soul like a vesper hymn, cheering and consoling, blessing and promising, even while it warns.

—The most elaborate work on the Tariff Question, which has yet appeared in this country, is that by Mr. ERASTUS B. BIGELOW, which has just been issued from the press of Messrs. LITTLE, BROWN & Co., of Boston. Mr. BIGELOW considers the question particularly in regard to the policy of England and the interests of the United States, and argues most emphatically in favor of the protective policy, which, he insists, experience has proved to be the true one. To sustain his arguments, Mr. BIGELOW adds a formidable statistical appendix to his book, probably embodying more facts bearing upon this subject than have before been gathered in the same space. To the advocates of the protective system, this work of Mr. BIGELOW will be as indispensable as the Springfield Arsenal or Fort Pitt Foundry are to the Government. The one will furnish quite as forcible arguments against the advocates of free trade as the others do against the rebels. APPLETON & Co., are the New-York agents for the work.

—Mr. A. S. ROE, who, in his time, has written a great many novels of more or less excellence, has added another to his list, Like and Unlike, published by CARLETON. There is a great vacuum in the public mind, which publishers abhor and think it their duty to fill. They go to their work as one would to fill a gap in a public road, throwing in cobble-stones that lie conveniently near, without going to distant quarries for expensive marble. So long as the public taste is not offended by the material used, all is well enough. Cannon balls must have something to run on, and cobble-stones, if well packed, answer nearly as well as a finer and more costly macadamization. Where people only want to employ time that they have no other use for, a volume that contains five hundred pages, rises to the proportions of a public benefactor. Reading such books may be a great deal better than finding fault with the Administration, or attempting to solve the plan of the campaign, or the merits of rival generals, but still we fancy that, as time is not immortal, time might be much better employed.

—The Fifteenth Volume of APPLETON's New American Cyclopædia has made its appearance. It covers topics extending from Spi to Uzz,—from Spiritualism to Uzziah. Mr. PARSONS, of Harvard University, furnishes articles on Stamp Acts, Surety, Tender and various other legal topics. Among the other contributors, we notice the names of Rev. J. P. THOMPSON, D. D., Gen. JACKSON CURTIS, and other distinguished writers.

Preamble setting forth that it is [illegible]

A message returning, without his approval, resolution appointing Noah Tugwell a Commissioner of Deeds for the City and County, in place of Jacob O. Horton, as follows:

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, Oct. 18, 1862.

To the Honorable the Board of Aldermen:

GENTLEMEN: While I meet with the lamentable the Common Council in the acceptance of the resignation of Jacob O. Horton as Commissioner of Deeds, and have indorsed my approval thereon, I must return to you unsanctioned the accompanying resolution, appointing Noah Tugwell a Commissioner of Deeds for this City and County in place of said Jacob O. Horton.

My objection to this appointment is, that the number of commissioners existing is, if not equal to, yet very nearly equal to, the number authorized by law, namely, one hundred and eleven. Which is one hundred and eleven more than the law authorizes me to appoint.

I am informed from the proper quarter, and believe that the appointments have been so made that it is impracticable to ascertain which of the four hundred and eleven Commissioners constitute the three hundred authorized by law.

Under these circumstances, I would respectfully recommend that no more appointments or reappointments of Commissioners of Deeds be made until the number shall be reduced, by the expiration of terms or otherwise otherwise, to less than the legal number.

GEORGE OPDYKE, Mayor.

Which was received, and on the table for three days, all desired to be entered at length in the minutes.

MONETARY AFFAIRS.

of Gold Deposits on receiving checks against them, to be employed, as they are now frequently employed, for the purpose of enhancing the price of Gold and of inducing Congress to fix upon Gold, under these heads, or any other these engaged, alike incontrovertibly, perhaps, in the same mischievous work, would carry more than about their former proportion of $20,000,000. It was then deemed quite sufficient by their managers—and no one complained of them, who had a right to do so, to wit, their own dealers—to report, respectively, say $1,800,000; $1,600,000 and $600,000 on their weekly averages. They much oftener fell below than went above these figures. Speculations in Gold and United States Custom-house Notes have now made them the custodians of, say, $3,800,000; $2,400,000, and $2,600,000 respectively, in Gold, and how much more in United States Custom-house Notes which go up and down with Gold on the Stock arena, we have no means of knowing.

But it is asked, what safer security to lend upon than Gold, or what more improving security than United States Custom-house Notes to own, could the Banks have? The question itself ignores the principle, self-stultifying and self-die, honoring as it is, of lending upon Gold by the Associated Banks of the great cities, whose stake in the Public Credit, and whose direct interest as Banks of Circulation and Deposit, in the Currency of the Country, are notoriously at war with the rapid, wholly speculative, and, of course, unnecessary, as well as alarming appreciation of Gold. Aside from this vicious principle, however, it could be answered in the present condition of a great Civil War, which might, at any moment, and without so much as a day's warning, take a turn in the direction of an early peace, that Gold, now selling at 120 ⅌ cent., and a few days ago at 138, and borrowed upon at Bank at the rate of 115 or 120, or 125, would not be the safest security to lend upon, at such valuations. And we have reason to infer that, since this discussion was brought about by the extraordinary attempt of Tuesday and Wednesday last, sympathized in, it may be, by some of the very Banks in question, to push Gold from 130 up to 140 ⅌ cent., the lenders themselves have come to a realizing sense of the danger of the operation, and have already required, in a number of instances, their advances upon Gold to be paid up, or else reduced at once to its par value, and other instances will probably show as soon as the operation can be eased off without serious inconvenience to the borrowers. It is even intimated that after the 1st of November such advances may cease altogether, by common consent, between all the Associated Banks. They would necessarily be diminished at once, should the machinery of the Stock Exchange Board be withheld from the use of the speculators in Gold. It has thus far been used by few other buyers, since, the export demand being mainly confined to bullion in the shape of California bars or large coin, $20 pieces cannot be answered under the rule of the Board which recognizes all American gold coin, even down to $1 pieces, as a good delivery. Shipping parcels are therefore mostly obtained through and put up by the Bullion Brokers, as in former times. Of the $3,000,000 in sales registered at the Board last week, it is safe to say that less than one-fifth was bought for export, although the clearances of the week were above the usual average, and even this small proportion must have been subsequently reassorted and the small coin resold. It is needless to add that the regular Bankers in Foreign Exchange are seriously embarrassed instead of being facilitated through this machinery.

The foreign trade of the past week was unusually active, with considerable excitement in prices on the Corn Exchange among the factors and export buyers. The value of the clearances of the week is $4,444,382, as against $2,807,827 the week before, and $3,277,997 the same week last season. The Import entries of Foreign Merchandise, including the Dry Goods return in our last paper, amount to $4,096,749, against $2,197,129 same week last year. The Export of Gold and Silver, chiefly the receipts from California, Mexico and New-Orleans, amount to $1,714,000. The Customs Duties paid into the Sub-Treasury amount to $1,106,000. The United States Notes for Custom-house use have fluctuated with Gold, though not approaching it as closely as the week before in its upward rise. The highest figure for the Notes was 131½ on Wednesday. They closed on Saturday 124@125, against 129½@130 for Gold; the latter leaving off 1 ⅌ cent. higher than at the close on Saturday week, after having gone up nearly 10 ⅌ cent. The rates of Exchange on London, first-class Bankers, after selling at 150@151 ⅌ cent. for a brief time near the middle of the week, left off 142@142½ ⅌ cent. Money returned to 4@5 ⅌ cent. to the Brokers at call and the surplus placed on 4 ⅌ cent. interest with the Treasury amounts to about $1,500,000 for the week.

The Secretary of the Treasury has thus far entertained no propositions for a large loan from the Banks. His current means amount to over $1,000,000 per day, with the prospect of a large increase in November from Inland Revenue. He has a large reserve of United States Notes, independent of the power to issue in substitution of the old Notes of July 17, 1861, as they come in for Customs and are canceled.

His Customs per day are	$250,000
Four per cent. Deposits	200,000
Postal Currency	50,000
United States Notes, 1s and 2s	100,000
United States Notes, large denomination	250,000
Inland Revenue	100,000
Total	$1,000,000

The last item will soon be increased to $200,000 @$250,000 ⅌ day, as the machinery of the new system is brought into practical operation. The twelve months' Indebtedness Certificates of the Treasury are moderately increased, and now amount to $66,000,000 or $69,000,000. The line of 4@5 ⅌ cent. temporary Deposits in the Sub-Treasuries will probably soon reach the maximum of $100,000,000.

The tables of the Foreign Trade at New-York, published a few days since, make the Import entries, exclusive of Specie, for nine months of the calendar year:

Jan. 1 to Sept. 30, 1862	$137,511,000
Add three weeks in October	10,854,552

Against same time, 1861	105,197,323

The same tables make the Export Clearances of Domestic Produce and Miscellaneous Goods, including Foreign articles reexported, from

Early in the week the Stock Market made a further recovery from the decline of the previous Friday, both in price and demand, on the Share list, and up to Tuesday afternoon the temper of the market was all in one direction. On Wednesday the excitement on the Gold question interfered with the dealings in Stocks, and unsettled, for the moment, the confidence of buyers more particularly on the Western list. The following day and up to the close of the week the firmness of demand returned and was well supported, the New-York roads, however, continuing in the lead. Both classes of Erie are especially strong, with evidences of substantial wealth at the back of the present speculation to carry up prices still higher; other circumstances of the general market favoring it. New-York Central gained 3 ⅌ cent. on the previous week, and the Western Roads from 1½ to 2 ⅌ cent. The Federal and Border State Stocks participated but partially in the dealings of the week. There is more business doing in the Illinois State Stocks, which, in addition to their attraction of interest payments in Gold, for investment, are wanted for banking basis at home. The Railway mortgages continued strong, but something less buoyant in the new Western descriptions. The City Bank Stocks are advancing on a good demand, and a small offering at the Board. The general market left off steadY on Saturday. The Western Railway prices have not yet recovered to the highest points of week before last, when Gold rated at 125@124 ⅌ cent. Erie is now about the same, after falling to 57 on the day that Gold went to 138. New-York Central now something higher. The questionable theory that Stocks must go up in currency price as Gold appreciates over the currency standard has been singularly at fault since Gold left off 123 ⅌ cent. There is no doubt that the movement in Stocks would be a much more reliable one for all parties if Gold were thrown out of the Board dealings.

CENTRAL OFFICE, SANITARY COMMISSION.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20, 1862.

The Sanitary Commission, at the request of Gen. Halleck, most earnestly advises against the practice of sending presents to soldiers of articles which it is supposed will add to the convenience of their camp life. To the knowledge of the Commission, many hundred tons of such presents are now piled uncoverly in storehouses and yards, upon old camp-grounds, while thousands have probably been destroyed to prevent their falling into the hands of the enemy, and but a small part of all that have been received by those to whom they were addressed have been of the smallest value to them, except the tokens of the affectionate interest of their friends. For this purpose, letters and such other small and light articles as can be transmitted by mail would have been much better. Larger gifts occasion serious practical mischief—men and officers being, naturally averse to throwing them away—they add to the incumbrances, which are a chief cause of the excessive fatigue, and thus of the sickness, of the soldier. Volunteers almost universally, until they learn better by dearbought experience, undertake to carry an excessive amount of clothing. In this cause, and to the excessive baggage of their officers, some of the severest losses of the Union forces in the present war are attributed by the highest military authority. But even when successful in battle, the attempt to secure comfort by the possession of an unusual amount of clothing is nearly always frustrated; the heaviest knapsack being thrown away at the first, long-continued hard march, while the light one is retained, and the few articles needed, taken from it, thrown out of, when the light and short one is protected. Similar observations apply to regimental hospitals. The hospital of a regiment in the field should be supplied with nothing but the barest necessities for the temporary treatment of the sick when, in all serious cases, are removed as fast as possible to general hospitals, where the supplies of the regiment are not available. An excessive amount of regimental hospital stores and convalescents is a penalty to the sick and wounded; for it occasions the frequent detention and separation from the regiment of the few articles essential to the usefulness of the surgeon. The Commission has from the first protested against a common error of surgeons in this respect, as well as against the greater evil of the common attempt of the volunteer soldiers to carry into the field too many of the means of comfort to which they are habituated in civil life. In compliance with the request of the General-in-Chief, this appeal is addressed to those in whose mistaken kindness both these evils are believed to have been greatly aggravated and sustained.

FRED. LAW OLMSTED, General Secretary.

FOR THE SICK AND WOUNDED.

Under an order from the President of the United States, a national system has been established by the Sanitary Commission for the safe transportation and judicious distribution of articles contributed by the people for the sick and wounded of the Army and Navy. The system, after being well tried, has been thoroughly approved and recommended by the President, the General-in-Chief and the Surgeon-General. Thousands of the officers against misappropriation is practically perfect until the contributions are delivered in the hospitals, where they necessarily pass from the control of the Commission. Of more than a million articles sent through one of the largest of its general supply, it has been ascertained that not one hundred have miscarried or been dishonestly used. Discreet and trustworthy agents are constantly employed in visiting all divisions of the army, including those on the Southern coast, the Mississippi and the Western frontier, to observe their wants, to distribute supplies where they most need, and to report, so far as practicable, their present use. The Commission does not undertake to deliver articles to individuals, and declines to receive contributions with any restriction as to their destination within the limits of the force employed in the service of the Nation; it being one of its objects to discourage, on the sentiment of National unity wherever it can make its antagonism with State or local pride. The distribution of hospital supplies is but a branch of the work of the Commission. It employs the best means at its command to obtain in the country to aid its larger purposes; to do all that is possible for the health and vigor of our fighting men, to lighten their burden, and to sustain their spirits under the privations and hardships which are an essential part of successful warfare. For this purpose contributions to its treasury are solicited. They may be directed to the Treasurer, G. T. STRONG, Esq., No. 68 Wall-st., New-York.

Contributions under any element from the President of the United States; Rev. Henry W. Bellows, D. D.; Prof. A. D. Bache, LL. D.; George W. Cullum, U. S. A.; Alexander E. Shiras, U. S. A.; Robert O. Wood, U. S. A.; Surg. A. Williams, U. S. Navy; Surg. W. Quain, U. S. A.; William H. Van Buren, M. D.; Wolcott Gibbs, M. D.; Samuel G. Howe, M. D.; Cornelius R. Agnew, M. D.; Elisha Harris, M. D.; J. S. Newberry, M. D.; G. T. Strong, Horace Binney, Jr., Right Rev. Thos. M. Clark, D. D.; Hon. Joseph Holt, R. W. Burnett, Hon. Mark Skinner, Frederick Law Olmsted.

Contributions of suitable supplies for the sick and wounded will be received at the rooms of the Women's Central Relief Association, No. 19 2d-av., Cooper Union, New-York. For further information apply in New-York at the local office of the Commission, No. 68 Broadway, or by mail to FRED. LAW OLMSTED, General Secretary, Washington.

NEW-YORK, MONDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1863.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

We have again a repetition of the reports that Winchester is being evacuated by the rebels—this time brought to Gen. Stahl's headquarters by deserters and refugees. These reports are given some plausibility by the fact that Leesburgh has already been evacuated, as ascertained by a reconnoissance on Friday and Saturday. Measures were secured, are being taken to ascertain the truth. The reports of the evacuation obtain considerable credence in Washington, though some of the military authorities are inclined to doubt them and still believe that Lee intends to wait in the vicinity of the Potomac for an attack from McClellan—believing that a retreat would prove more disastrous to the rebels than a battle.

Our special correspondent with Gen. Stahl's command telegraphs some important information relative to movements in front of Washington. A force of cavalry and artillery, under Gen. Stahl, left Centreville on Wednesday, for the purpose, if possible, of forcing Stuart into a fight—it being known that he, with his cavalry, was somewhere east of the Bull Run Hills, and threatening our advance. On Thursday, our forces advanced as far as Aldie, but Stuart fell back, declining an encounter. There was some skirmishing with his pickets, and several prisoners were captured. A still further advance was made on Friday, rebel pickets being driven in at Ashby's Gap, and some pickets from the rebel force at Warrenton being captured. Gen. Stahl encamped at White Plains during Friday night, throwing forward his pickets to Thoroughfare Gap. About 5 o'clock on Saturday morning his forage and commissary wagons, seven in number, together with fifteen soldiers and six teamsters, were captured by a detachment of North Carolina Cavalry at Newmarket, where they had been left. An attempt was made to recapture them, when the enemy in considerable force was encountered in Thoroughfare Gap, but after a short skirmish were driven back. Our forces pursued to the vicinity of Warrenton, but could not induce the rebels to make another stand. Gen. Stahl's command returned to Centreville about 1 o'clock yesterday evening, with about a hundred prisoners, twelve horses and one caisson—having lost, besides the train, two horses killed. Rebel pickets are reported within two miles of Centreville.

The intelligence from Kentucky is important. Morgan, with fifteen hundred guerrillas, captured Lexington on Saturday morning after a sharp fight with a small force of National cavalry stationed there. He did not stay long, however, but took the Versailles turnpike, on which, between Versailles and Frankfort, he was suddenly met by about 2,500 of Gen. Dumont's cavalry and routed after a short fight—his forces being scattered. It is supposed that he will endeavor to unite his scattered forces with Humphrey Marshall, who was expected to make an attack on Paris last night.

By letters received in Louisville within a few days it is learned that, simultaneously with the attack upon McCook's corps, near Perryville, a rebel force of thirty-five thousand strong, under Hardee and Buckner, made an attack upon Gilbert's corps. They were soon repulsed, and that portion of our army were astonished at the sudden withdrawal of the enemy. Their course has since been explained, as Buckner was wounded, and they were left without a leader and commander on whom they could rely. Hardee, it is said, hopes to his old habit of drinking, and whenever he can get liquor, is unfit for duty.

An intercepted letter from a rebel officer to a friend in Lexington, Ky., states that the rebel General Claiborne was killed in the fight near Perryville, and that his command was transferred to Gen. Wm. Preston. The same letter states that the rebel General Woon was wounded, and that the rebel force engaged in the fight was fifteen thousand.

The report of a battle at Big Hill, Ky., was based on the statements of two gentlemen who arrived in Louisville from Lexington on Thursday evening. They reported that a battle was fought on Wednesday at Big Hill, eighteen miles beyond Richmond, in Madison County, in which Kirby Smith's rebel army was badly whipped. They asserted that the engagement was opened at an early hour of the day, and that the firing was heard in Richmond until a late hour in the afternoon, at which time a large number of rebel soldiers had arrived, having thrown down their arms, declaring themselves whipped. The National troops were said to have been under command of Gen. Thomas, who is next in rank to Gen. Buell. The rebels were also reported to have lost all their supplies, consisting of eighteen hundred beef cattle, several hundred barrels of pork, and a large quantity of other subsistence. Another rumor was to the effect that the retreat of Kirby Smith's command, which left Richmond on Tuesday in the direction of Estill Springs, had been cut off.

An apparently reliable report comes to us from Gallipolis, Ohio, that the Kanawha Valley has been evacuated by the rebels, with the exception of Point Pleasant, at the mouth of the Kanawha River. It is confidently said the rebel force recently stationed there have fled with a view to rendezvousing at Logan Court-House, Boone County, Va., on the Guyandotte River.

There is news of Gen. Price's retreat from Iuka. Gen. Price is gathering the remnants of the rebel army of the Southwest at Holly Springs, Miss., with the intention of attacking some point on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad. If so, Gen. Grant will doubtless pay his respects to him shortly, as Holly Springs is only about a good day's march below Grand Junction.

In consequence of the fact that no boat had arrived from Memphis in three days, it was feared in Cairo, on Saturday, that some trouble had occurred on the river below. A rumor prevailed that the rebels had attacked the National forces at Island No. 10, but it could not be traced to any authoritative source.

The heavy reconnoitering parties under Gens. Hancock and Humphreys, which proceeded from the Army of the Potomac in the direction of Winchester on Thursday, returned to their positions again on Friday, as stated in our special dispatches. The party under Gen. Humphreys was followed by rebel cavalry and artillery to within a short distance of Hedgeville, and one of our men was killed and six wounded. We captured a number of prisoners, and it is understood that the rebels had between forty and fifty men killed and wounded while disputing our advance.

On Saturday we published a report received from Fortress Monroe, that a skirmish had taken place at Blackwater River, near Suffolk. We learn that Gen. Peck has been greatly reinforced at Suffolk, and his right flank is effectually covered by gunboats in the Nansemond River. An attack from the rebels is hourly awaited. Our outposts beyond Suffolk have been strengthened, and excellent defensive operations are being prosecuted vigorously. The rebels are supposed to have but eight thousand men on the south side of James River, in Virginia and North Carolina. It is said that we can have fifty thousand men there in twenty-four hours, and in forty-eight hours afterwards have Petersburgh and Richmond, and that before the rebels know what we are doing. Why not do it, then?

We have advices from Port Royal to the 4th inst. through our special correspondent. Gen. Benham and his command had returned from Jacksonville, Fla., and full particulars of the expedition will be found in our correspondent's letter. The negro church at Hilton Head was dedicated to Divine service on Sunday, the 12th inst., and a black man from Savannah, named Abram Murchison, was installed a Pastor. The exercises on the occasion were quite interesting, and rendered more so by the presence of Gen. Mitchell, who made an address to the colored congregation, embodying his views of the Slavery question. There are indications that we shall hear of active operations in the Department of the South very soon.

The latest advices from Corinth are to the effect that prisoners continue to be brought in singly and in squads. On October 14, Capt. Ford, of the Tennessee Cavalry, who had escorted a provision train into the country, captured about sixty rebel soldiers. He says the woods are filled with their wounded and stragglers, many of whom would willingly give themselves up, if not afraid of the Kansas and Illinois cavalry. The tone of feeling among citizens is very much modified since Gen. Price's defeat. They say that Price admitted that he received terrible punishment, and that not three thousand of the thirty thousand men which went into action could now be mustered. His plan was to attack Purdy and Bethel, and then make a rapid march upon Jackson, and thence to Paducah. That this was his plan is evident from the maps, plans and diagrams captured in the recent battle. We have Price's recruiting officer as prisoner.

The official reports of our loss in the battle on the Hatchie make our killed 55—wounded, 429.

Rebels killed (found on the field)	205
Rebels died in hospital	120
Total	325
Wounded left in hospital	342
Removed by Price	350
Prisoners	201
Total	1,428

Rebel prisoners, captured at Corinth, state that Price officially reported a loss of 1,500 men. Gen. Little (late U. S. A.) and Col. Stanton were the most prominent rebel officers killed.

Union killed—commissioned officers	6
Union wounded	39
Union missing	1
Total	46
Privates and non-commissioned killed	138
Privates and non-commissioned wounded	559
Privates and non-commissioned missing	39
Total	736

Besides considerable quantities of Quartermasters' and Commissary stores, we captured of the rebels, 1,629 stand of small arms and 13,000 rounds of ammunition.

GENERAL NEWS.

The latest returns of the Pennsylvania election indicate that fifteen Union Congressmen are elected. The State ticket is still in doubt, but the chances are in favor of the Democrats. The Legislature will have a Democratic House and a Republican Senate, with a Democratic majority on joint ballot.

The remains of Commodore Wm. L. Hudson were on Saturday, interred at Greenwood Cemetery, after solemn funeral ceremonies performed at St. Anne's Church, Brooklyn, by the Right Rev. Bishop McIlvaine and the Rev. Drs. Johnson, Vinton and Cuyler, the latter preaching the discourse. A battalion of United States Marines escorted the remains to their final resting place.

The Board of Aldermen met at 1 o'clock on Saturday afternoon. The name of Robert H. McCurdy, for Street Commissioner, was rejected by 9 to 5. The Mayor sent in another veto of an appointment of a Commissioner of Deeds, because the number of such officers in the county already exceeds by 111 the number authorized by law to be appointed. The Board adopted a resolution calling upon the County Clerk to furnish a list of the Commissioners whose terms of office expire this year. A resolution by Mr. Adams, to have the Committee on National Affairs confer with Gov. Morgan in relation to crediting each county and District with its due share of enlistments—men of this county having enlisted in other counties, and vice versa—brought out the remark from Mr. Dayton that the Senatorial District Committees would attend to the matter. The resolution was adopted. Another, by Mr. Dayton, inquiring of the Croton Board if they have granted permission for removing the pavement to lay rails in Seventh-avenue was likely to lead to a protracted discussion on the "rights of the City" and "legislative assumption," when Mr. Boole said he understood the Corporation Counsel had obtained an injunction against the Seventh-avenue Railroad Company, whereupon the resolution was reported to the Railroad Committee. The $1,000,000 Harbor and City Defence Ordinance offered by Mr. Boole at the previous meeting met with strong opposition from Mr. Dayton. He opposed the arrangement of the commission—the Mayor and Comptroller, five Aldermen and five Councilmen. It would be injudicious, he insisted, to select the major portion of the commission from among themselves. The ordinance was passed by 9 to 5. A committee of five was appointed to confer with a like committee from the other Board on the Family Aid and Fractional Currency Ordinance. The Board adjourned till one o'clock on Monday.

The Democrats of the Fourth Congressional District, New-Jersey, have thrown overboard their present representative, George T. Cobb, and nominated as his successor Alexander J. Bowers. Mr. Cobb's claims were passed by simply because he refused to indorse a resolution declaring that the "Emancipation Proclamation of President Lincoln was both unconstitutional and impolitic."

The Stock Market, on Saturday, closed steady. The pile of Gold fell from 121¼ on Friday afternoon, to 120¾. Exchange on London fell.

Shipping at Greenville and Providence was much less active on Saturday; prices of Flour, Wheat, Corn, Pork and Lard were somewhat lower. A fair demand prevailed for Fish, Fruit, Hay, Hops, Saltpetre, Tallow and Tobacco. Wool, Salt, Hides and Leather were in lively request at buoyant rates. Whisky was cheaper, and rather neglected. Rio Coffee, Spices, Sugar and Black Teas were freely purchased at rising prices. The Freight market continued quite unsettled.

Philosophy of Crushing the Rebellion Vindicated.

There is no word that so completely expresses the duty of the Government toward the rebellion as the word "crush." To conquer will not do; for a conquered spirit may gather new courage after the lapse of time, and fight again. It will not do to conciliate or appease; for such treatment involves no destruction of the principle of treason, but is rather a recognition of its rightful existence, entitling it to consideration and mercy. In the first case, or the last, the revolt is merely suspended, and may break forth again any time, involving the nation in the same horrible strife that now afflicts it. The rebellion must be crushed. There is annihilation in that phrase that implies no resurrection of the offending arm. An adder may be called conquered, if his aimless dart of poisoned fangs is rewarded with a blow that drives him writhing to his hole. But if his head be crushed by the club, there is an end of him. His carcass rots above ground, and his poison sinks harmless through the sod into Nature's alembic.

Of all the civil and military officers that Mr. Lincoln has sent forth to deal with treason, none has manifested the wisdom, firmness and skill of Gen. Butler. The history of his administration at New-Orleans will always be regarded as one of the most extraordinary and singularly interesting chapters in the annals of war. Gen. Butler set out with the cardinal principle that the rebellion had to be "crushed," and he has pursued his purpose to that end with remorseless rigor. So severe has been his discipline that he has incurred the most vindictive hate of the rebels everywhere; and their Presses, both here and in England, teem with degrading epithets applied to him—"tyrant" and "beast" being among the choicest.

Yet it is a remarkable fact that, so far, only four lives have been sacrificed under martial law in New-Orleans; and three of these were of Unionists, who were executed for plundering private (secession) families, on the pretence of gathering in their firearms under an order of the Department! Only one rebel has suffered death under Gen. Butler's order; and that was Mumford, who was executed for his temerity in tearing down a Union flag where lawfully raised by military authority. This is a slight cost in human life, all must admit, of crushing the rebellion in the largest city of the South, and hitherto one of the most licentious and democratic in the world.

The secret of Gen. Butler's bloodless rule in New-Orleans has not been his adroitness in avoiding conflicts with the stubborn and almost satanic spirit of treason in the population of the city. On the contrary, no man could have trodden more ruthlessly than he has done upon everything that treason held dear and sought to surround with the charms of sacred sentiment. The mock-heroic devotion to their "Confederacy" which the rebels vaunted as patriotism, was to Gen. Butler the confession merely of a depraved nature fighting wickedly against a good Government. It was a spirit to be ashamed of—to be punished—not to be cherished or respected even by him.

Mayor Monroe, in surrendering the city to Gen. Butler, brought out in bold relief the arrogance of secession. The National officer was told that New-Orleans surrendered to "brute force" merely—that its citizens were Confederate rebels still—were high-spirited and chivalric, and must have due respect paid to their prejudices! Gen. Butler was permitted to enter the city as a conqueror, but he and his Government were to be held in utter detestation by the people of New-Orleans, and treated as aliens, exercising only a temporary rule over a foreign people.

The reply of Gen. Butler crushed this vaunting attitude entirely. He, as an officer of the Government, was present to exterminate opposition, not to make terms for friendly relations with it, under the rules of military etiquette. And a few days after this first lesson, Mayor Monroe was still further disenchanted of the secession illusions by being remanded to imprisonment in a casemated fort for disobedience to orders—just as any other commonplace offender against the police law might have been.

The courtly Soulé, not long after, followed the fate of the high-strung and magniloquent Mayor. And a whole class—the smooth-tongued, two-faced aristocrats, who hoped to save property and gain rebel prestige by means of corrupt influences gained over the National authorities—read their fortune in the case of Soulé. The rich corporations, bankers and merchants, who thought, through Soulé, to purchase exemption from the lot of the common herd of citizens, and to remain rebels while they profited by the military presence of the Government, fell victims to the unerring justice and luminous loyalty of Butler, when this officer unrolled before the public a long list of voluntary subscriptions, amounting to $500,000, given by the affluent parties to aid treason in its effort to destroy the Government, and assessed each subscriber one-half of those liberal amounts, to relieve the sufferings their treason had caused! There was a fairness in the appraisals of each party's pecuniary ability in this case, and a justice in the application of the quarter of a million of dollars assessed, that must have stamped Gen. Butler as a "second Daniel" with the Orleanoise.

The rebel women of New-Orleans next came in for their share of treatment. The supercilious dames, who presumed to abuse the immunity always heretofore afforded to women's tongues in America, began to rail and spit contempt where their husbands and lovers durst no longer fight. The celebrated "women's order" cured that distemper instantly. Ladies thenceforth behaved themselves, and were respected. The impudent courtesan, who mocked when the corpse of a gallant officer was drawn through the streets, received her reward in military confinement, and their female insolence was wholly crushed.

The petulence of foreigners resident in New-Orleans, and sympathizing with secession, next fell under Gen. Butler's discipline. We know how quickly he cured this class of persons of their disposition to dictate either law or manners to the authorities of the United States Government, and need not take time for recapitulation.

Thus all classes passed in review before Gen. Butler, and received his discipline:—the Confederate officials in the person of Mouton—the fanatical mob-element in the person of Mumford—the city hypocrites in the person of Soulé—the foreign-born Secessionists in the persons of impertinent Consuls—the female rebels, of the pure and impure sort—the rich merchants and bankers. All have had their appearance before the Union General, and found that he—representing truly his great and good Government—is no respecter of persons.

But there is one other class still to be disciplined, and the latest accounts from New-Orleans tell us how it has met its judgment. These are the quasi Union men, (represented by the distinguished Dr. Mercer,) who have been too national to aid the rebellion, but too selfish and timorous to manifest their loyalty to the Union. In a letter to Gen. Butler, this dubious loyalist endeavors to escape the duty of renewing his allegiance to the Government of the United States, (made entirely appropriate since the Secessionists have put the whole State in a position of nominal rebellion,) and to that end assures the General that he has "never joined any society or public body of the Confederacy." And, as if to put the climax to his claim to exemption, he adds: "Since your arrival here, I have maintained a strict neutrality!" In the Times, the other day, we gave this letter and Gen. Butler's memorable reply, from which we reproduce the following:

"In my judgment, there can be no such thing as neutrality by a citizen of the United States in this contest for the life of the Government. As an officer I certainly cannot recognize such neutrality. 'He that is not for us is against us.'

All good citizens are called upon to lend their influence to the United States; all that do not do so are the enemies of the United States; the line is to be distinctly and broadly drawn. Every citizen must find himself on the one side or other of that line, and can claim no other position than that of a friend or an enemy of the United States."

This lays the ax to the root of the tree. If Louisiana were full of such Unionists as Dr. Mercer, it would still be but the nursery of treason and rebellion. The idea of a citizen's "neutrality" in the agonizing struggles of his Government for existence is the very root of treason. There can be no true loyalty where and while such a sentiment lives; and Gen. Butler crushes it.

In his policy of extermination of the very sentiments, prejudices, pride and sophistries of the rebellion, Gen. Butler is pursuing the course of truest humanity. If he had yielded for an hour to a single demand that has been made upon him since he entered New-Orleans as the representative of a rehabilitated Government, he would have been sowing dragon's teeth, to rise up at a future day as armed men. Monroe, if indulged in his rhodomontade, would have kept the city in a state of perpetual mutiny. The women, if left to use their sharp tongues unbridled, would have provoked a hundred bloody broils. The impertinent Consuls, if allowed to dictate, would have established practically a foreign protectorate of secession under the very flag of the Union. Dr. Mercer's example, if licensed, would have absolved all citizens of their fundamental duty of loyalty and left the nation without a subject. And all this accumulating error would have had to be purged out at a still future day, by hotter fires than have yet burned in the South. The policy of making terms with treason would have piled up wrath against the day of wrath.

Gen. Butler's severity has been real humanity. Under his administration tens of thousands of the citizens of the late rebellious and mob-ridden city are returning to duty and ranging themselves under the old Government, and New-Orleans will be the first city of the South to stand "redeemed, regenerated and disenthralled."

New-York for the Union and for the War.—More than once since the war began, the wavering courage of the nation has been rallied by the promptness and enthusiasm of the Empire State. Just after the outgoing of Buchanan's Administration, when the Treasury was exhausted by the sudden and enormous demands upon it, before any financial system was devised for the support of the war, and while the Government itself seemed hardly stable and coherent enough to justify any trust in its financial engagements, then it was that New-York City came forward, and, by a loan of fifty millions of dollars to Mr. Chase, restored confidence at home and abroad. It is no exaggeration to say that this early negotiation did more to revive the spirits of the people, and restore their confidence in the vitality and ultimate preservation of the Union, than any victory in the field would then have done. And as it was reanimating to the loyal North, to an equal degree was it discouraging to the rebellious States, and to their allies abroad. It had been thought by them that the United States would have to rely on foreign capitalists for money to carry on the war; and the London Times, of that day, contained frequent and earnest warnings to the British public not to take any of the loans that the United States would be anxious to negotiate! But the Bankers of New-York City renewed their faith in and their allegiance to the Government of the United States by pouring out their treasures in its service, and from that moment the Republic lived again and drew to itself the support of the hearts and arms of twenty millions of people.

At other stages in the progress of the war, the moral and material power of the Empire State has been called on to do like vast and inestimable service in the support of the Government, and in strengthening the hands of the Administration into which, for the time being, are committed the issues of life and death to the Union. And never has the call been made in vain.

But now, at the last, a danger more threatening than ever before stands in our presence. A political party is boldly seeking office and power through the country's shame and by cunning falsehoods it has already won a dangerous progress in some of the States. Under the pretence of supporting the war, it denounces every measure resorted to for its prosecution. Under the claim of sustaining the President, it characterizes almost every act of his Administration as a tyranny and a usurpation. Under a pretence of hostility to the rebellion, it leaves no opportunity unimproved to enlist sympathy in behalf of the wretched leaders of secession who have plunged the land in blood. The Republic is again in danger—for these domestic foes are the most deadly. Will not New-York State, in her great might, come again to the rescue? This State must go for the Administration, for the Union, and for the War. And then the last hope of the enemies of the Union will perish.

The Increase of Our Cavalry.

It is matter of congratulation, in view of the present advance, and prospective activity of the army of the Potomac, that a considerable addition is being made to the cavalry arm of the service. Squadrons of light horse, well mounted, thoroughly disciplined, and officered by capable men, are useful under any circumstances; but in an offensive war, when the population is not actively friendly, the occasions for employing cavalry to advantage are innumerable. They occupy, as has been remarked by Jomini, as important a place in an offensive campaign, as do corps of partisan rangers in a defensive war. They fulfill almost the same functions, hanging on the flanks or rear of the enemy, cutting off his supplies, deranging his combinations, harassing him night and day, discovering his weakest points, threatening his communications and exhausting his forces by necessitating a strong convoy for every train of ammunition or provisions.

Against us cavalry has been used with no small success. It is time we began to employ it with effect against the enemy. Stuart's three audacious raids are too fresh in our memories for us to doubt the value of active, bold, well-organized and dashing dragoons. The course of the war so far has been an unbroken chain of proofs corroborating the truth of the axiom of Napoleon, that "an army weak in cavalry, rarely achieves great successes, and its retreats are perilous and difficult." An attentive study of the campaigns of McClellan and Pope cannot fail to convince any intelligent observer that there have been several golden opportunities in almost every battle, when the enemy's lines, being broken, and his troops thrown into disorder by the combined attacks of our well-massed infantry and of our incomparable artillery, all that was wanted to convert a check into a rout, and to crown a partial success with the laurels of a glorious victory, was such a crushing, resistless cavalry charge at the decisive moment as that delivered by Seydlitz at Rosbach, by Ney at Jena, or by Blucher at Waterloo.

We learn from history that the numerical proportion which cavalry should bear to infantry, has varied greatly at different epochs. Under the earlier Roman Generals it formed one-tenth, and in the army of Alexander the Great, one-eighth. During the middle ages it increased to one-half. Under Turenne it was one-third. In recent wars, from the use of more destructive weapons and the adoption of improvements in strategy and tactics by Gustavus Adolphus, Frederic and Napoleon, the proportion has been fixed at from one-fourth to one-sixth. In mountainous countries, such as Switzerland, which are impracticable for large bodies of cavalry, the proportion is one-tenth. From these statements, it appears that an army of a million of men, under the existing conditions of warfare, cannot be made complete and effective, equally adapted for attack and defence, except it contain at least one-sixth, or over 160,000 well disciplined horse soldiers.

Military writers, however, lay down three other conditions, which modify, in certain cases, the proportion of cavalry. These are: first, the strength of the enemy, and the audacity, enterprise and swiftness of his movements; secondly, the abundance and quality of the horses we can make available for army purposes; and thirdly, the natural disposition of our people, whose aptitudes are more or less favorable to their becoming efficient horse-soldiers. On these points we need say no more than that each of them supplies a new motive to us to fill our cavalry force to its proper standard. For since we have, in the loyal States, an abundance of material for raising as numerous and as good a body of cavalry as can be found anywhere else in the world, we should be wanting to ourselves were we to discard this element of our strength, and should, by such a course, both prolong the war and provoke further disappointments and disasters. It is the opinion of competent authorities that the addition to the army of the Potomac of a body of 20,000 well-mounted horse-soldiers, whose equitation, discipline and organization were perfect, would be worth more to us at the present moment than ten times that number of veteran infantry.

We have had the opportunity of conversing with a gentleman of distinction recently arrived from Richmond, who has enjoyed excellent opportunities for informing himself as to the condition of affairs in the capital of the army of the Confederacy.

He reports a very general feeling of renewed confidence in the population and among the military of the South. The success at Harper's Ferry, and the quiet withdrawal of Lee's force across the Potomac, have sufficed to convert the battle of Antietam, in the popular imagination, into a great rebel victory, and the Confederate troops were said to be in the highest spirits.

It is the impression of our informant that Lee intends to give battle to the National armies from his base at Winchester; that he has never thought of abandoning the Potomac without a contest, and that he has now under his orders fully 150,000 men between Richmond and the frontier of Virginia.

If this intelligence be correct, as we have reason to believe it must in the main be, we may certainly look for a serious conflict at an early day, in the region of country between the rivals. The three parties, the supporters of Lincoln, who compose the Government party, have slipped away, and are now ranged, one party in favor of the war, one against it, and one, fixed in the mire of impracticable and more impossible notions.

Domestic Disunion and Foreign Intervention.—The election of Mr. Seymour would tend to encourage the secession States to continue the war than their immediate sympathizers in Europe would. In the inception of the rebellion, Northern weakness was counted upon as an element of Southern strength. It was rightly argued that a divided North could not stand against a united South. But hitherto there has been no division among our people. They have been a unit in the opposition to rebellion—twenty million hearts have beat as one. The only chance that this union has now occurred. The instalment of a Republican Administration, a portion of the fruits of its support, gave the rebels the pretexts the South sought for the secession of its people. The November election, if too differed from the Administration and elected to oppose its necessary measures, it would be regarded by the rebel States as the first outcropping of Northern sympathy, the first indication of that disunion spirit upon which they relied when they raised upon their armies when the skeleton of secession was first chalked out upon the cabinet walls of a Pro-Slavery President. It would be regarded by them as a virtual abandonment of the right of their rebellion—for they only differed from the Administration in a slightly greater degree, and proclaimed the difference with more boldness, than New-York would in making such an election.

The emancipation proclamation [illegible] the souls of the Secessionists [illegible] and chafe themselves [illegible] whose virtue the old farmer proposed to do, now that it is found that grass and [illegible] missiles will not do. The policy it [illegible] has been adopted by the Government, not as an end but as a means of the war. At the same summons we have given men and money without stint, willingly laying down the first-born of the land as sacrifices upon their country's altar. It is scarcely worth while to be more scrupulous when it becomes necessary to sacrifice rebel property. After one hundred thousand loyal sons of the North have been deprived of life, we should not be particularly delicate about depriving the murderers of their wrongful right of possession in a few millions, more or less, of human souls. Against such over-fastidiousness the mute protest of a hundred thousand corpses is already entered. It only remains to be seen whether we shall proclaim the doctrine we have already made to have been spent in vain—whether we withdraw our support from the cause to which we have so lavishly given it at a time when most it needs our support and our steady cooperation—whether, after driving the plow thus far, we halt and turn back, quarreling as to how best the harvest may be reaped, or drive it to the end of the furrow.

The bugaboo of the North hitherto has been foreign intervention. Whether or not the Emancipation Proclamation lessens a danger which has from the first been quite imaginary, it is not worth while now to discuss. Nero may have fiddled while Rome burned, but he certainly did not deliberately fan the flame. It is recorded that he clutched at the fingers of the noble Romans who ran with the engine of the period. Let the Seymour Party keep itself, and distract the public attention with trivial issues, wholly aside from the main one involved, if so disposed. But there is a danger, and a real one—a danger that has hung over us from the first, like the sword of Damocles, and which the madness of party, and the reckless ambition of politicians, now threaten to loose. The recognition to-morrow by all Europe of the secession States as an established government would not make them one. They would still have to forge out their purpose on the anvil of war against the counter-blows of a united and determined nation—a people only confirmed in their strong opposition to an unholy rebellion by an inexcusable foreign meddling. Confederate stock would not rise one penny in the market, though all the crowned heads of the Old World were laid together to acknowledge Jeff. Davis master of the New, or at least of that portion of it comprised by the Cotton States. But let us only show the first symptom of disunion among ourselves—one sign, or a shadow of a sign, of wavering—and it would go to the rebel heart like an elixir, impairing its flagging energies and buoying up with hope its dispirited breast. It is not intervention on the part of the Court of St. James, nor is it the nod of Napoleon, we have to fear. It is, on the contrary, the intervention of party distinctions at home, the madness of reckless political ambition, that threatens to unnerve our arms, and render unavailing our efforts in one of the mightiest contests for conviction and principle ever the world witnessed. It is not the recognition of the rebel States by foreign Powers that would make all the blood and treasure lavished by the North wasted in vain; it is the recognition of the right of rebellion by domestic dissenters, who propose to take issue with the Government and hamper its action, even while it is putting forth its strong arm to hurl the only heavy bolt the rebels have yet been called on to encounter. It is not the intervention of Europe we have cause to fear and deprecate, but the intervention of the Seymour Party.

Then and Now.—The Union army and the rebel army in Virginia occupy relatively nearly the same positions now as they did at the corresponding period of last year—the former being then on the south bank of the Potomac, opposite Washington, and the rebels some twenty miles west, at Manassas; now, the bulk of the Union army is on the south bank of the Potomac, higher up at Harper's Ferry, and the rebel army, some twenty or twenty-five miles west, near Winchester. Both armies, now and then, were in strong positions. By reference to our files of October, a year ago, we see that then [illegible] Army Worm.—It was about this time last year that the public were comforted by the assurance that Gen. McClellan's army was [illegible] to fall; so that our men might be able to see the enemy upon whom they were to bring to bear their musketry, artillery and bayonets. The story was a capital one, and relieved the popular impatience [illegible] We have not heard of the Virginia forces during the past year as an excuse for delay; but a Washington telegram the other day solemnly announced that our army was waiting for [illegible] before it attempted to advance. [illegible] is not near as good as that of last year; for last year's fell the [illegible] inasmuch as it depended upon a [illegible] phenomenon; but we suppose it can be demonstrated that Lynn and Boston [illegible] McClellan's troops in three or four days, at the end of which time a brand new excuse will have to be invented. While [illegible] however, is waiting for new brooms, we suggest that Government examine, and see that each man of it is supplied with [illegible]; for the weather will soon be so cold, that if it is discovered they are without [illegible] of clothing, it will be impossible [illegible] a single regiment to advance—except, perhaps, the gallant Seventy-ninth New-York Highlanders, who go into battle without [illegible]. Let all these matters be attended to at once, and quickly; and then, let our army, with its new shoes, kick the rebels [illegible] till they are beyond the furthest limits of the Confederacy.

THE SOUTHWESTERN CAMPAIGN.

What Remains to be Done—Knoxville—Vicksburg—Mobile—Reconstruction Fatal to the Rebels in the Southwest.

The Tribune, October, 1862.

The war is very nearly ended in the Southwest, and that, too, with the utter destruction of Bragg—if (yes, if) our Generals and statesmen comprehend their true situation. I always [illegible] to put this if in—but you, as well as I, have learned by hard experience, that an if lies in the way of all our Generalship. "Lost opportunities," said Mr. Lincoln of McClellan; and find there anything more true or just? I call the Maryland campaign a "lost opportunity," and I call the present stand still on the Potomac (yclept by the euphemistic "all is quiet on the Potomac,") a "lost opportunity." Fine weather, fine roads, and yet a quarter of a million of good troops lie idly basking in the October sun on the Potomac. But I leave that part of the campaign to you. If you are satisfied with bloody battles, in which the flower of Northern men are slaughtered without results, I have nothing to say. My eyes are cast over the Western field, where a little military genius might long since have ended the war. The rebel raids toward the Ohio were invited, and caused by the total want of any reverses, and the total neglect of seizing the mountain fastnesses of East Tennessee. I think the awful blunders of the Potomac and the Peninsula are even less than that of neglecting to seize Knoxville, which, as I long since wrote you, might have been done a year since. The same opportunities have occurred again; shall they be lost? I don't know; but I have learned to fear. Our situation is now, however, far better than it has been at any time, and I have, therefore, taken courage, and really think the end is near. Let us see where we are, and what remains to be done. Much less than many suppose. First, then, our victories at Corinth and on the Hatchie are real, and attended with decided results. If they had been reversed, Price's victorious army would have marched on Nashville, captured it, joined Bragg, and wintered in the best part of Kentucky. All this scheme of the rebels is overthrown, and we are masters of the Southwest, if we follow it up. In this Gen. Rosecrans deserves great credit for he is the real General, both of West Virginia and the Southwest. The army has now advanced into Mississippi, as far as there is advantage to be gained, till something else is done, of which I shall speak. Secondly, the defeat of Bragg at Perryville was also a decided gain. On the face of it, it was a repulse after a hard fight. But that repulse was an utter defeat of the enemy in an attempt to retreat through Middle Tennessee, and that is, if Buell keeps, as he ought to do, to the south. On that point, I am doubtful, for Buell is slow; but when this letter arrives, you will probably know. If Bragg cannot retreat through Middle Tennessee, I do not see how his army can escape, at least without being cut up into small pieces. Again, even if Buell merely follows him into Middle Tennessee, the defeat of Price and Van Dorn by Rosecrans cuts him off from any reinforcements or help, in a march of full three hundred miles. It seems, therefore, that it will require uncommon stupidity in our Generals not to destroy Bragg's army. At any rate, the retreat of the rebels from all Kentucky, Middle and Western Tennessee, is certain; and the question is, what remains to be done to insure the final conquest of the whole Southwest? But little, I think, compared with the strength of our immense army. But, as I have always said, the first military necessity of the day is to capture Knoxville. Chattanooga is important, but not so commanding. Knoxville is necessary in order to command the Virginia and Tennessee Railroad, the salt-works of Virginia, support the loyal people and cut off guerrilla parties in their strongholds. Without the mountains the rebels can make no stand, and Knoxville is a point d'appui for an advance through all the water-courses of the mountains. After Bragg's army is driven out of Kentucky, it can be taken at once.

The next point to be taken is Vicksburg, which will open through the navigation of the Mississippi; and this should have been done four months ago. There was nothing to prevent it but the want of a small land force, which might easily have been sent. The defeat of Price and Bragg, and our greatly superior forces, render it easy to be done now.

The third and last thing to be done, is the capture of Mobile. This will take, I think, more [illegible] Vicksburg, the Southwest is conquered. It is a [illegible] to suppose that our armies must run over the whole surface and take all the towns. There are but few points of any military and commercial importance. New-Orleans and Memphis are two of them; but these we have. When we have got all these points, the existence of armies of commerce and of profitable production, becomes impossible. Vicksburg is only of importance as obstructing the Mississippi. Mobile is of great importance, because it is the only considerable shipping port, except New-Orleans, in the Southwest. Mobile and Charleston are the great places into which English goods and arms have been introduced into the South, and we can now take them at any time, and they are worth ten victories. Battles and bloodshed are in vain, except they give results. Now, suppose Knoxville, Vicksburgh and Mobile taken; what military power remains to the rebels in the Southwest? Absolutely nothing. There is no point d'appui for either army or guerrillas; no possibility of support; no foreign assistance; there is an exhausted country, without a fortress and without an available army. Cut off from Texas and Arkansas, cut off from all ports and markets, cut off from the mountain retreats, cut off from even subsistence—except from one means of strength. What is that? The negroes,—and here we come to the terrible effect, if it is enforced, of the Emancipation Proclamation. I will only say one word of this, to show what a powerful war measure it is,—Vicksburgh and Mobile being taken, the whole of the Mississippi River, the Tennessee, Yazoo, Big Black, Pearl, Mobile and numerous bays, and estuaries and bayous, are entirely commanded by our gunboats; and almost within cannon shot of these there are more than a million and a half of slaves. In fact, all the great cotton and sugar plantations are on navigable waters. On the 1st of January the Proclamation takes effect, and these negroes are free. Will they be removed? Not at all. What happens then? The masters must support them, without being able to command their services. To support them without their labor is impossible. What, then, is to be done? One of two alternatives must take place. Either the masters must pay the negroes for their labor, as in the Free States, and thus retain them; or, the masters must leave the country to the negroes. Which will they do? I know not; but you see at once that either of them involves an entire reorganization of Southern society. And to this color, it seems to me, the whole war must at last come. Its legitimate and philosophical result is the destruction of the Southern aristocracy, and the reorganization of society on a new and better basis. Can you see any other result? A Veteran Observer.

AMUSEMENTS.

Up to Saturday night there had not been, during the present season, a new piece produced at any of the leading theatres. Mr. Wallack has pinned his faith entirely on the old comedies, whilst at Niblo's and the Winter Garden there has been no variety but that afforded by a judicious nightly change from one legitimate tragedy to another. This is a very excellent and inexpensive species of success so far as the managers are concerned, especially when the public seems to be content as well as generously patronizing. Yet the interests of dramatic art demand the occasional production of original pieces, either native or imported—the former in preference, of course, if they can by any possibility be obtained. Standard pieces are all very well in their way, but the drama, like all living institutions, requires now and then an infusion of new blood to sustain its vitality and preserve it from stagnation. Mr. Wallack, recognising this fact, and, as usual, becoming the exemplar of an enlightened change of policy, the evening brings out a comedy never before acted in this country. Called "Friends and Foes", when first presented in London, it has here been rechristened "Bosom Friends," the alteration of name being justified by the remodeling which the piece has undergone at the hands of Mr. Lester Wallack. The English adapter of the piece need not feel aggrieved at this infringement on his literary patent; at least not until he has accounted to the author for the liberties he took with the French original. "Bosom Friends" is said to be a very charming comedy; a neat, incessant mingling of sentiment and humor of the kind known to be so surely popular when played by Mr. Wallack's company. One reason why Mr. Wallack has selected "Bosom Friends" for his first novelty is the opportunity which it affords him of including in its performance nearly all the best actors in his company. Mrs. Hoey, Miss Henriques, Mrs. Rehearsa and Mrs. Vernon, Mr. Lester Wallack, Mr. Fisher, Mr. John Gilbert, Mr. Reynolds, Mr. Norton and Mr. John Sefton all have parts in it. It is Mr. Wallack's intention to alternate a few choice new pieces with the old comedies, until some new play that shall have stamina enough to fill his theatre upon its merits, shall chance to come into his hands.

Mr. Forrest appeared in "The Gladiator," for the first time this season, on Friday evening. Spartacus being a character in which Mr. Forrest is universally allowed to be unapproachable. The revival drew as large an audience as could conveniently be crowded into the spacious auditorium of Niblo's. Mr. Sherwell, Mr. McCullough, Madame Poznzi, and Mrs. J. H. Allen, (who has been engaged to sustain Mr. Forrest during the remainder or his engagement,) capably performed the other important characters. "The Gladiator" is announced for repetition to-night, and will probably be given through the week. To-morrow night Mr. Raeszer plays in the "Man of the World" and "Monsieur Mallet."

Mr. Edwin Booth, in "Richelieu," has achieved so brilliant and decided a triumph as to warrant the management of the Winter Garden in continuing the run of the piece until further notice. It will be played for the eighth consecutive time this evening.

There are plenty of rumors afloat as to what the various operatic impressarii are going to do for their own and the public benefit during the coming holidays nights of Winter, yet nothing really reliable appears to be known, and the mere record of vagrant gossip only excites expectations that may never be realized.

One operatic adventure, however, is now actually under way in the City, and it deserves special notice and commendation. It is not Italian, neither is it the fashionable sensation of the hour; but it is a thoroughly well-conducted enterprise, appealing to the taste of a large and thoroughly appreciative class of the community, and its success has been commensurate with its deserts. This enterprise is under the direction of Carl Anschütz, is German in its nature, and is being carried on at Wallack's old theatre, No. 485 Broadway. All the week, Messrs's opera, "The Seraglio," has been admirably presented there, Madame Johannsen, Madame Hotze, and Messrs. Quiz, Lezzi, Wehnlich and Gaehl, singing the principal parts. To-night, the comic opera of "The Czar and the Carpenter" will be brought out, supported by the same excellent artists.

The charming pictorial illustration of California now on exhibition at Hope Chapel are really well worth seeing. They are far superior to the average run of panoramic pictures. They are artistically executed and are valuable for their fidelity to natural. Mr. Tissell, by whom they have been painted, explains them to his audiences in an amusing and well-delivered lecture.

Boucicault's drama of "Pauvrette" has been received at Barnum's Museum with tremendous favor. It is one of the most effective, picturesque and absorbingly interesting pieces ever constructed; it has, in this instance, been put upon the stage in the best and handsome style, and it is powerfully acted by a very capital company.

The first of Mr. Gottschalk's second series of concerts takes place this evening at Irving Hall. On this occasion Mr. Gottschalk will be assisted by Madame De Lussan, Mr. William Castle (a new [illegible]

[illegible] Gaiety Minstrel Hall, at No. 444 Broadway, is by the most refined and respectably attended place of Ethiopian character in the City. The entertainments offered there are rich and varied enough to suit the taste of everybody.

Mr. Tissie's delightful series of panoramic pictures, illustrating an artist's explorations in the Golden State, and now on exhibition at Hope Chapel, are really well worth seeing. They are beautifully painted, and Mr. Tissell explains them in a sparkling and pleasantly delivered lecture.

The Sixth Annual Festival of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, for the benefit of the poor, comes off at the City Assembly Rooms on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of this week. Every evening there will be promenade concerts by Dodworth's Band.

BRADY'S PHOTOGRAPHS.

Pictures of the Dead at Antietam.

The living that throng Broadway care little perhaps for the Dead at Antietam, but we fancy they would jostle less carelessly down the great thoroughfare, saunter less at their ease, were a few dripping bodies, fresh from the field, laid along the pavement. There would be a gathering up of skirts and a careful picking of way; conversation would be less lively, and the general air of pedestrians more subdued. As it is, the dead of the battle-field come up to us very rarely, even in dreams. We see the list in the morning paper at breakfast, but dismiss its recollection with the coffee. There is a confused mass of names, but they are all strangers; we forget the horrible significance that dwells amid the jumble of type. The roll we read is being called over in Eternity, and pale, trembling lips are answering to it. Shadowy fingers point from the page to a field where even imagination is loth to follow. Each of these little names that the printer struck off so lightly last night, whistling over his work, and that we speak with a clip of the tongue, represents a bleeding, mangled corpse. It is a thunderbolt that will crash into some brain—a dull, dead, numbing weight that will fall upon some heart, straining it to breaking. There is nothing very terrible to us, however, in the list, though our sensations might be different if the newspaper carrier left the names on the battle-field and the bodies at our doors instead.

We recognize the battle-field as a reality, but it stands as a remote one. It is like a funeral next door. The crape on the bell-pull tells there is death in the house, and in the close carriage that rolls away with muffled wheels you know there rides a woman to whom the world is very dark now. But you only see the mourners in the last of the long line of carriages—they ride very jollily and at their ease, smoking cigars in a furtive and discursive manner, perhaps, and, were it not for the black gloves they wear, which the deceased was wise and liberal enough to furnish, it might be a wedding for all the world would know. It attracts your attention, but does not enlist your sympathy. But it is very different when the hearse stops at your own door, and the corpse is carried out over your own threshold—you know whether it is a wedding or a funeral then, without looking at the color of gloves worn. Those who lose friends in battle know what battle-fields are, and our Marylanders, with their door-yards strewed with the dead and dying, and their houses turned into hospitals for the wounded, know what battle-fields are.

Mr. Brady has done something to bring home to us the terrible reality and earnestness of war. If he has not brought bodies and laid them in our door-yards and along the streets, he has done something very like it. At the door of his gallery hangs a little placard, "The Dead of Antietam." Crowds of people are constantly going up the stairs; follow them, and you find them bending over photographic views of that fearful battle-field, taken immediately after the action. Of all objects of horror one would think the battle-field should stand preeminent, that it should bear away the palm of repulsiveness. But on the contrary, there is a terrible fascination about it that draws one near these pictures, and makes him loth to leave them. You will see hushed, reverend groups standing around these weird copies of carnage, bending down to look in the pale faces of the dead, chained by the strange spell that dwells in dead men's eyes. It seems somewhat singular that the same sun that looked down on the faces of the slain blistering them, blotting out from the bodies all semblance to humanity, and hastening corruption, should have thus caught their features upon canvas, and given them perpetuity for ever. But so it is.

These poor subjects could not give the sun sittings, and they are taken as they fell, their poor hands clutching the grass around them in spasms of pain, or reaching out for a help which none gave. Union soldier and Confederate, side by side, here they lie, the red light of battle faded from their eyes but their lips set as when they met in the last fierce charge which loosed their souls and sent them grappling with each other and battling to the very gates of Heaven. The ground whereon they lie is torn by shot and shell, the grass is trampled down by the tread of hot, hurrying feet, and little rivulets that can scarcely be of water are trickling along the earth like tears over a mother's face. It is a bleak, barren plain and above it bends an ashen sullen sky; there is no friendly shade or shelter from the noonday sun or the midnight dews; coldly and ungivingly the stars will look down on them and darkness will come with night to shut them in. But there is a poetry in the scene that no green fields or smiling landscapes can possess. Here lie men who have not hesitated to seal and stamp their convictions with their blood,—men who have flung themselves into the great gulf of the unknown to teach the world that there are truths dearer than life, wrongs and shames more to be dreaded than death. And if there be on earth one spot where the grass will grow greener than on another when the next Summer comes, where the leaves of Autumn will drop more lightly when they fall like a benediction upon a work completed and a promise fulfilled, it is these soldiers' graves.

There is one side of the picture that the sun did not catch, one phase that has escaped photographic skill. It is the background of widows and orphans, torn from the bosom of their natural protectors by the red remorseless hand of Battle, and thrown upon the fatherhood of God. Homes have been made desolate, and the light of life in thousands of hearts has been quenched forever. All of this desolation imagination must paint—broken hearts cannot be photographed.

These pictures have a terrible distinctness. By the aid of the magnifying-glass, the very features of the slain may be distinguished. We would scarce choose to be in the gallery, when one of the women bending over them should recognise a husband, a son, or a brother in the still, lifeless lines of bodies, that lie ready for the gaping trenches. For these trenches have a terror for a woman's heart, that goes far to outweigh all the others that hover over the battle-field. How can a mother bear to know that the boy whose slumbers she has cradled, and whose head her bosom pillowed until the rolling drum called him forth—whose poor, pale face, could she reach it, should find the same pillow again—whose corpse should be strewn with the rarest flowers that Spring brings or Summer leaves—when, but for the privilege of touching that corpse, of kissing once more the lips though white and cold, of smoothing back the hair from the brow and cleansing it of blood, stains, she would give all the remaining years of life that Heaven has allotted her—how can this mother bear to know that in a shallow trench, hastily dug, rude hands have thrown him. She would have handled the poor corpse so tenderly, have prized the boon of caring for it so dearly—yet, even the imperative office of hiding the dead from sight has been done by those who thought it trouble, and were only glad when their work ended.

Have heart, poor mother; grieve not without hope, mourn not without consolation. This is not the last of your boy.

With pealing of trumpets and beating of drums, These troubles shall pass—the Son of Man comes. And then is reserved for him that crown which only heroes and martyrs are permitted to wear—a crown brighter than bays, greener and more lasting than laurel.

The Twenty-Mile Trotting Fiasco.

The announced twenty-mile trot, which was to have taken place Saturday on the Union Course, did not come off, although most of the leading turfmen of New-York and vicinity, and many from other parts of the United States, were present. The match was made by J. D. McMann to trot his sorrel gelding Prince—16 years old—to wagon, 20 miles within the hour, for $1,000 a side, Horace F. Jones betting against time. McMann brought his horse on the track, and after waiting for [illegible] half hour, felt, to the great disappointment and disgust of the crowd, [illegible] that the horse had lost the race, but Prince—like other steady competitors—has his constitutional ailments and has been recently under the hands of Dr. Dunn, the veterinary surgeon, therefore Mr. McMann cannot be censured for [illegible] so much expense and loss of time to the public, when he could have as well given notice in the morning papers that the match was off. An offer was made by Mr. Shaw, the proprietor of the track, to get up a trot, but the sporting men preferred to receive back their dollars, and left. Only two twenty-mile trots have ever been accomplished within the hour; the first, we believe, took place on the Union Course, in the Fall of 1849, and was performed by Stewart's [illegible] thoroughbred Trustee—dam Fanny Fulkerson—in 59 minutes 35½ seconds. The same feat was also done in 59 minutes 55 seconds, by Lady Fulton, in 1853, on the Centreville course.

IMPORTANT FROM KENTUCKY.

Lexington Again Captured by Morgan and his Guerrillas.

The Rebels Overwhelmed by Gen. Dumont.

Morgan Routed and his Forces Scattered.

Humphrey Marshall Expected at Paris.

CINCINNATI, Sunday, Oct. 19.

After capturing our pickets, the guerrilla MORGAN dashed into Lexington yesterday morning at the head of 2,500 men. Before surrendering, our troops fought him gallantly, killing and wounding several. Our loss is 6 killed and 120 prisoners, who were immediately paroled, all of our cavalry succeeded in escaping.

To-day, while between Versailles and Frankfort, he was overhauled just by about 2,000 of Gen. DUMONT's cavalry, who, after a short fight, routed him, scattering his forces. One report says he was driven across the Kentucky River in the direction of Lawrenceburg, and another that he is endeavoring to join Brig.-Gen. HUMPHREY MARSHALL, who is near Shelbyville.

An attack from MARSHALL is looked for at Paris to-night.

Lexington is in possession of our troops.

LOUISVILLE, Sunday, Oct. 19.

Jean Morgan left Lexington with his forces yesterday, passing through Versailles, thence through Lawrenceburgh at daylight, and was at Bloomfield at 9 o'clock. Gen. DUMONT is in pursuit. There has been no fight between DUMONT and MORGAN.

Bragg is reported just south of Mount Vernon. Gen. CRITTENDEN's army corps is further south, in pursuit of Bragg. It is supposed the rebel army is crossing the Cumberland River in Tennessee by Big Creek Gap and Wilson's Gap. BUELL is in close pursuit, and it is believed he will force the rebels to fight, or capture a large portion of them before they reach Cumberland Ford.

The Perryville battle at Chaplin's Hills was brought on prematurely and against the orders of Gen. BUELL, whose plans for enveloping the whole of Bragg's army were frustrated and his pursuit of the rebels delayed by that circumstance.

THE SITUATION IN KENTUCKY.

From the Louisville Journal of Friday.

Our hopes are not realized by the news from Bardstown, it appears, that, in passing through or beyond Crab Orchard, BRAGG was about seventeen miles south of Stanford.

We cannot say much now whether BRAGG can escape or not, unless the latter deliberately chooses to be caught. We do not suppose, though, that the rebels can make the requisite speed in their retreat if they encumber themselves with cattle, hogs, or any considerable amount of bacon and flour. They may perhaps make a stand at some stronghold in the Cumberland Mountains, yet it does not seem likely, considering their numbers, that they could subsist there for any length of time. We think the present probability is, that they will attempt to get across the Cumberland River into Tennessee, this stream being now so low that it may be doubtful be forded at many points. If, however, BUELL pushes on with fiery speed, BRAGG may fail in the attempt to put the river between them, and at any rate the rebel General, even if he succeed in escaping with his huge army from Kentucky, will, by his flight, lose prestige with his nation and win his own followers.

We can hardly expect any intelligence of interest from the belligerents, or the competitors in marching, for some days. If BRAGG get safe into Tennessee after the late terrible spoliation of Kentucky, we cannot even conjecture what the programme of action on either side will be thereafter. BRAGG may go into Virginia to join LEE, or he may establish himself at Chattanooga and other points in East Tennessee, or he may strike for the capture of Nashville, and seek to get back into Kentucky by nearly the same route he recently traversed. Meanwhile BUELL, at the head of his magnificent army—a host capable of mighty achievements—will, no doubt, be governed in his action by the logic of events.

Affairs in Kentucky have ceased to be thrilling. The price of the cloud has died away, and nothing is left for the present but a dull, cold patter of rain.

OUR LOUISVILLE CORRESPONDENCE.

LOUISVILLE, Thursday, Oct. 16, 1862.

You have seen the horrible narrative of Wm. C. Quinn, who implicates Boyd, Gossage, Carter and Lawrence in the Senate—how JOHN MORGAN's brigands have treated him, and hundreds of others, in these and adjoining counties, three of which alone contributed 5,000 volunteers to the Government. The homes of the volunteers and the remaining loyalists sacked and ruined; the labor of a lifetime destroyed; their wives and children burnt up with their houses, murdered, or driven penniless and naked to the woods. No wonder Senator GRIER cries out, "Because I condemned this wicked rebellion, urged a vigorous prosecution of this war, and, in my place in the senate of Kentucky, opposed the temporizing policy of my own party, I am persecuted, turned out, and hunted out of Kentucky. I am now unequivocally for extermination, subjugation, extermination, and hell and damnation!" No wonder the wayward Cincinnati Enquirer, (son of the editor,) after he was mercifully scalped in his raid on Augusta, said, "We have good men among us, but we have also very bad ones."

Some "Tigers," very bad as they are, are lambs by the side of MORGAN's savages. BRAGG, who is reported as having a very unpopular disciplinarian, has, for effect, executed, reclaimed his men, including FORNEY's and GRAY's cavalry, from depredations and outrages. But MORGAN has had his own way and way. Most of the men who deserted recruits from Central Kentucky joined MORGAN.

Kentucky has suffered terribly. She is gutted. Within a few days there is said to have furnished to the invading army 17,000 hogs, 1,000 horses, $100,000 worth of hemp for Jeff. Davis' corps. Within a month, the State has been robbed of at least 20,000 to 30,000 horses.

Quite a panic among our Indian cotton cultivators and other cotton goods. Calico 25 cents a yard, and rising fast some a day.

The first hogshead of the new crop of tobacco brought yesterday, 25 to 28 per hundred.

Exchange, yesterday, offered 27 cents for gold and 28 cents for silver—40 cents for demand notes.

LOUISVILLE, Friday, Oct. 17, 1862.

In the Louisville hospitals here, about 1,000 wounded rebels; in the seven New-Albany hospitals, about 1,000. Our Provost Guard rebels on the Ferry-boat Bonnie Belle, still unharbored, last Saturday. About 1,000 rebel prisoners, captured by BUELL's army, left here yesterday by way of Nashville. They looked shabby and seedy, but full of fight. Two thousand guerrillas whom Humphrey, and as many more at Cynthiana, Georgetown and Paris, are to be rendezvous will be attended to by the Ohio militia.

"Copperhead" the late Frankfort Yeoman's Lexington correspondent, wrote that KIRBY SMITH made a speech in Lexington on the 1st, "in which he was severe on the pusillanimous and unintelligent to secession which characterized the many Kentuckians." He and Gen. WILLIAM PRESTON urged on all to come forward at once. He urged Kentuckians to rally under the Southern flag. The Yeoman, you know, was MAGOFFIN's organ, and JOHN B. MASON was its editor. Of course, the tone of the Yeoman was so heartily approved by KIRBY SMITH, that he contemplated things to raise a regiment of Shorters. But on that Col. SHORT raised up in the air, he spoke of the Kentucky Rangers and the Yeoman's Guards, some three score, one sergeant, and two privates.

Gen. C. S. FERGUSON, of the Twenty-seventh Kentucky Volunteers, some time ago, commanded a brigade in Tennessee, and, after a short fight, routed him, scattering his forces. One report says he was driven across the Cumberland River in the direction of Lawrenceburg, and another that he is endeavoring to join Brigadier-General MARSHALL, who is near Shelbyville.

An attack from MARSHALL is looked for at Paris to-night.

Lexington is in possession of our troops.
